THE ARCTIC EXPLOREK.

From leafy England far away
His bones are laid;
Not where the lark saliutes the day,
Nor where white lambs in meadows play,
In the green shade.

He lies within a leafless land,
In the cold snow,
Where no kind foot or kindlier hand
Can visit him, or weave a band
To soften woe.

The white drift whirling all around
On sea and shore,
They took him from the ship ice-bound,
And laid him gently in the ground
For evermore.

And though no English larks shall throng
To soothe his slumber with their song,
He lies secure from mortal wrong—
O sweet and brave!

The secret of the Polar sea
Is yet concealed;
But to thy vision, pure and free,
The secret of eternity
Has been revealed!

Evening Hours.

The Congregationalist on Mr. Beecher.

From the Congregationalist, the leading and most influential paper representing the Congregational denomination, we clip the following extract respecting the recent Beecher trial. After stating the dilemma in which some men find themselves with respect to Mr. Beecher's guilt or innocence, the Congregationalist says:

"In the first place, they cannot conceal from themselves the fact that precedent might be found in the history of the race to cover all of unlikelihood which would be involved in the supposition of his guilt.

"In the second place, testimony was given during the trial, and remained unshaken by all assault, which they are not able to harmonize with his version of the case; while it is not easy to see how anything short of the theory of willful perjury could reconcile such testimony with the fact of his real blamelessness, yet no plausible motive for perjury was shown or appears.

"In the third place, white, as between Mr. Beecher and his assailants, his word—even without his oath—of solemn denial would suffice, he has added his testimony to theirs against himself; so that there are passages in his acknowledged letters which all his explanations have failed to explain into such accord with the theory of his perfect innocence as to allow the common mind to rest quietly and continuously in that view—passages which, looking at the matter purely as a question of evidence and probability, even seem to be more easily and naturally explicable upon the theory of Mr. Tilton than upon that set forth by their author.

"In the fourth place, after granting all in the way of want of skill in the sharp discernment of character which can be reasonably pleaded in mitigation, they find it hard to understand why the pastor of Plymouth church, surrounded out of that church by wise and loving brethren in the ministry, and in it by good men and true, presumably thus having at hand scores of congenial spiritual comrades and counselors, should, neglecting them all, have intrusted himself so blindly and absolutely, as his confession proves him to have done, to the intimacy, guardianship and championship of a person self-styled 'a heathen,' obviously profane and godless, and, afterward accused of the basest intent. Scarcely less amazing is it that this pastor should have singled out from the sisters of his church for acknowledged intimacy, excessive laudation, and the most interior mental fellowship, a woman whose moral developments—assuming her absolute stainlessness as to the special charge on which this trial was founded—have been so painfully extraordinary. Although excluded from the stand by the rules of evidence, there seems to be reasonable proof that this woman did declare to more than one person that she had been guilty of what her husband charged of offense against Mr. Beecher; and that these declarations were made when she was wholly free from all superior force of that husband's will. If she told the truth, what are men to think of Mr. Beecher's protestations; if she lied, what are they to think of his choice of such an intimate?

"In the fifth place, they cannot understand why, from the beginning to the end of this case, thus far (and equally before the church and before the court) there should have appeared to be the constant endeavor on the part of Mr. Beecher to suppress investigation, and shut out testimony. This may have been due to the policy of his legal advisers, but even then must have been acquiesced in by himself; and they find it difficult to imagine how one strong in the strength of conscious innocence could tolerate such a policy, or rest quietly while Mr. Bowen and others not obscurely affirm their ability to add to the stock of knowledge of the case, if subpenaed to that end.

"In the sixth place, they deeply regretted that Mr. Beecher, if fairly reported, should intimate to his church, while the jury still had the case before them, that he purposed to go on in his ministry to them, whatever the character of the verdict might be. This implied, of course, that in virtue of his own consciousness of innocence, the eminence of his position, and the love and confidence of his people, it would be right and expedient for him to continue to exercise his ministry, even though legally convicted of the grossest violation of the seventh commandment. It seemed to them that a proper respect to the Bible and the moral sense of mankind should enforce, even upon him, a different conclusion; as beyond question the principles of the ecclesiastical polity which he and his church profess to accept could not fail to do. Paul says a bishop 'must have a good report of them which are without.' Albert Barnes, when in the plenitude of his great powers, retired from the pulpit before a judgment purely ecclesiastical for an offense of doctrine merely, while all admired the blended humility, piety and wisdom of his action. And many will conceive that Mr. Beecher's best hope of glorifying God and saving souls—now that the jury have found themselves unable to vindicate his innocence—may, for the present, lie in devoting his energies to the clearing up of what needs further explanation in that strange net-work of circumstances in which he has become entangled, postponing further occupation of the pulpit until, God helping him, that labor shall have been accomplished.

"And, finally, it has been a sore grief to many of his old friends that Mr. Beecher's demeanor during the trial has seemed so poorly in keeping with what many, at least, would think natural to an exemplary Christian minister, so situated that his conduct will, by multitudes, be taken as especially illustrating what religion is, wrongfully accused of a foul crime. While asserting his absolute innocence of intent or commission of guilt, Mr. Beecher has made no secret of the fact that he does charge himself with great and grievous folly, and that of act as well as speech. One would suppose that, so thrown before the eye of the world, and burdened with the distressing and harmful consequence of his own rashness and inconsistency, he would have been oppressed with shame and bowed in sorrow at the thought of the damage which, in any event, must surely come upon the cause of Christ through his indiscretions, and would walk softly and with downcast eye, as perpetually laden with grief, and as conscious of the heavy judgment of God in allowing such a tribulation to come upon him; and that, as Manasseh did, he would beseech the Lord his God, and humble himself greatly before the God of his fathers, until he should hear his supplication and bring deliverance. Perhaps Mr. Beecher has come as near to doing all this as could be possible to his mental and spiritual constitution. But had such humiliation been more obvious, had he said less in his prayer meetings about his being 'the happiest man in Brooklyn,' and seemed less jolly before the jury, the fact would materially have aided some who have been striving through all to retain that loving faith in him which they had aforetime."

The Art of Not-Hearing.

The art of not-hearing should be taught in every well-regulated family. It is fully as important to domestic happiness as a cultivated ear, for which so much money and time are expended. There are so many things which it is painful to hear, many which we ought not to hear, very many which if heard will disturb the temper, corrupt simplicity and modesty, detract from contentment and happiness—that every one should be educated to take in or shut out sounds, according to their pleasure.

If a man falls into a violent passion and calls me all manner of names, the first word shuts my ears, and I hear no more. If, in my quiet voyage of life, I find myself caught in one of those domestic whirlwinds of scolding, I shut my ears, as a sailor would furl his sails, and, making all tight, send before the gale. If a hot and restless man begins to inflame my feelings, I consider what mischief these sparks might do in the magazine below, where my temper is kept, and instantly close the door.

Does a gadding, mischief-making fellow begin to inform me what people are saying about me, down drops the portcullis of my ear, and he cannot get in any further. Does the collector of neighborhood scandal task my ear as a warehouse, it instinctively shuts up. Some people feel very anxious to hear anything that will vex and annoy them. If it is hinted that any one has spoken ill of them, they set about searching the matter and finding out. If all the petty things said of one by heedless or ill-natured idlers were to be brought home to him, he would become a mere walking pincushion, stuck full of sharp remarks. I should as soon thank a man for emptying on my bed a bushel of nettles, or setting loose a swarm of musquitoes in my chamber, or raising a pungent dust in my house generally, as to bring upon me all the tattle of careless or spiteful people. If you would be happy when among good men, open your ears; when among bad, shut them. And as the throat has a muscular arrangement by which it takes care of the air passages of its own accord, so the ears should be trained to an automatic dullness of hearing! It is not worth while to hear what your servants say when they are angry; what your children say after they have slammed the door; what a beggar says whom you have rejected from your door; what your neighbors say about your children; what your rivals say about your business or your dress.

This art of not-hearing, though not taught in the schools, is by no means unknown or unpracticed in society. I have noticed that a well-bred woman never hears an impertinent or vulgar remark. A kind of discreet deafness saves one from many insults, from much blame, from not a little apparent connivance in dishonorable conversation.

There are two doors inside my ears—a right-hand door leading to the heart, and a left-hand door, with a broad and steep passage, leading out into the open air. This last door receives all ugliness, profanity, vulgarity, mischief-making, which suddenly find themselves outside of me.

Judicious teachers and indulgent parents save young urchins a world of trouble by a convenient deafness. Bankers and brokers often are extremely hard of hearing when unsafe borrowers are importunate. I never hear a man who runs after me in the street, bawling my name at the top of his voice, nor those who talk evil of those who are absent, nor those who give me unasked advice about my own affairs, nor those who talk largely about things of which they are ignorant.

If there are sounds of kindness, of mirth, of love, open fly my ears! But temper or harshness or hatred or vulgarity or flattery shuts them. If you keep your garden gate shut your flowers and fruit will be safe. If you keep your doors closed no thief will run off with your silver; and if you keep your ears shut your heart will lose neither its flowers nor its treasures.

The Otter.

The otter is an extremely graceful creature, and its habits are interesting; but it is most to be admired when watched in clear water, swimming and tacking in undulations by the aid of its tail as a rudder, and surrounded by three or more of its young. It has been compared in form to the polecat, but this is not a happy simile, as its head is more blunt, its fur shorter and thicker, and its feet webbed. It is amphibious in its habits, but if kept under water more than a few minutes at a time is soon drowned, for to live it must come up to breathe. It is not so famed in architectural skill as the beaver, but it must be remembered that much that relates to the beaver's residence is fabulous. When in full growth it is about two feet in length from the nose to the tail, which is of itself fifteen or sixteen inches long, and tapers to a point; in this particular differing from the sea otter, whose tail is much broader. In color it is a deep brown, with a light patch on each side of the nose, and one also under the chin. The throat and breast are ash-colored, the mouth small, the lips furnished with strong mustaches, and the ears short and rounded. The eyes, which are diminutive, and placed near the nose, have a somewhat vertical aspect, which enables it to detect fish while lying below them on the bed of the river. Its neck is thick; the legs are thick, short, and very mobile in their articulations, enabling them to act with all the ease and effect of fins in the water, in which they have great power, as well by the flexibility of their joints as by the strength and muscularity of their members, and also by the close webbing of the toes, which, extending down to the very point, give them great power in swimming or diving. The otter evinces great sagacity in the construction of its dwelling. It burrows under the banks of streams or lakes, sometimes for a considerable distance, and always makes the entrance of its home under water, working upward to the surface of the earth, and fashioning three, four or more chambers, which ascend from one to the other. Nor does it neglect the important consideration of ventilation, as the interior atmosphere would vary in density as the water rose, but makes a few minute holes for the admission of air, generally contriving that these apertures shall be concealed by the gnarled roots of the stump of a tree or a thick bush. The female is often followed in the season by several males, and the fights of the latter are desperate, often fatal, but they are said never to utter a cry under any circumstances, although the female does occasionally give a shrill kind of scream, particularly when with young. She has sometimes five at a birth, which takes place in a warm chamber or "couch" deeply lined with moss, where she rears her little ones with extreme affection, assiduity and caution; for it is seldom they are discovered, although often sought for. Numberless instances, despite of what has been said to the contrary, might be adduced of the extreme fondness of the mother for her young, in defending which, in many instances, she has been known to lose her life. When her progeny has been caught and kept in captivity she has been seen to visit them, taking them fish, and at length encompassing their deliverance by tunneling from some secret spot to beneath their prison.—Chambers' Journal.

THE borrower in the following story must have taken his lessons in money matters from the distinguished financier who recommended that his friend should "let the other man do the walking." This story is from a Southern exchange: "An ancient darkey leaned over a Clay street gate yesterday and called to the dusky proprietor of a cabin: 'See heah, Henry, isn't you 'bout ready to pay me dat two-bit?' 'Havcn't nuffin to pay wid,' was the reply. 'You borrowed dat money a whole year ago, Henry,' continued the old man. 'Can't help dat—can't pay.' 'Henry, I believes you don't want to pay; I believes you is dishonest, and I shan't nebber ask you for de money agin. I'll leave the Lord to collect it.' 'Sho!' exclaimed Henry, greatly interested all at once; 'you hasn't enny more money to lend on dose terms, haz ye?'"

THE vast majority of expensive houses are a curse to their occupants. The husbands must be worried and overworked to the peril of health and life, a virtual exile from his family; the wife, so absorbed in trifles that she is as good as dead to the nobler uses of life; the whole family driven along the high road to social ambition and worldliness. Just as God begins to fill their hands with the means of a larger usefulness, they mortgage the home to the satan of social selfishness. But what a little paradise might your home become were every accession of means followed by an increase of Christian grace!—Lecture by Rev. Mr. Mayo, Springfield.

A MAN entered a ticket office in San Francisco recently and asked for a ticket for "Destination." To prove that he was not mistaken, he pointed to a notice which read: "Passengers who intend going further than Yokohama are requested to purchase through tickets to destination."

THOUSANDS of people might be enjoying reasonable lives, with opportunities for self-culture, for social enjoyment and for charitable efforts, whose whole energy is absorbed in the desperate struggle to add superfluities to comforts.

THE strength of man increases with the knowledge of his weakness.

Religious Intelligence.

—The past year is said to have been pre-eminently a revival year among the Congregational churches in Canada.

—The Methodist Episcopal Church has over one hundred and forty Christian women engaged daily in spreading gospel truth in India.

—The last census of Canada shows in the Dominion 21,000 Congregationalists, 237,000 Baptists, 550,000 Presbyterians, and 1,500,000 Roman Catholics.

—The total amount of receipts for the past year reported by the various religious societies of Great Britain, at the late anniversaries, was considerably over $8,500,000.

—The corner-stone of the Young Men's Christian Association building in Philadelphia was laid July 15. The building will cost $450,000 and be ready for centennial visitors.

—A Chinese teacher told Dr. Dean that the Bible could not be so ancient a book, after all, because the first chapter of Romans gave an account of Chinese conduct such as the missionary could only have written after full acquaintance with the people.

—A memorial, signed by 140,481 members of the Church of England, has been addressed to the Queen, praying her majesty not to countenance the proposals to legalize the use of eucharistic vestments and the eastward position of the celebrant at holy communion.

—The Wesleyan missionary anniversary this year was a very hopeful one. The collection was larger than ever before, being £184,039. The society has fixed its mark at £200,000. The religious growth of the missions has also been general and in every respect prosperous.

—The work of the Baptist missionaries among the Rabhas and Garos, in Assam, is going on with encouraging results. Old converts are steady in the renunciation of devil worship, and new converts are being made. Native teachers have been stationed among them and schools opened.

—The annual receipts of the American Baptist Missionary Union have advanced in twenty-five years from $104,837 in 1850 to $241,970 in 1875. It is only eight years since the first Baptist Missionary Society was organized in Kettering, England. The American Baptist missions date from the year 1814.

—It is stated that Rhode Island has in her Sunday schools some two thousand more persons than are enrolled as of school age within her borders. This indicates either that the children are gathered in with more than usual success, or that the adults are more faithful Sunday school-wise than is their custom. Either indication is a good one.

—Rev. Daniel Steele, D. D., the first vice chancellor of Syracuse University, is now professor of systematic theology in the new lay college, founded by Dr. Charles Collis, in Boston, and called by him "Faith Training College." The college was dedicated recently. The cost was $32,000, and a large part of the amount was received from voluntary subscriptions.

—The Madura mission has been trying the experiment—an successfully made by the Church Missionary Society in several parts of India—of holding protracted meetings in villages near the city of Madura. The results were encouraging. Catechists from various stations united in the work. The stagnation prevailing in a portion of this field was broken up. Fourteen converts were received into the church, and thirteen more have applied for admission, among them several from villages which for a long time have furnished no candidates for baptism.

—June 17 a Roman Catholic journal in New York telegraphs as follows: "To His Holiness Pope Pius the Ninth: The Catholic Review most humbly salutes the Pope of the Immaculate Conception, the pontiff of the Most Sacred Heart, praying that your captivity may speedily be terminated. With peace, prosperity and victory may the next decade of your most glorious pontificate be crowned. Paternally bless, on this auspicious day, our filial efforts for the Catholic cause." To this dispatch Cardinal Antonelli quickly responds: "His holiness affectionately received your good wishes. He concedes to you the benediction sought for."

—The delegates to the grand Presbyterian conference, assembled to unite into one alliance all the branches of that body, met in London, England, a few weeks ago. The American churches were well represented. It was voted to form an alliance of all Reformed Presbyterian churches of the world. Rev. Dr. McCosh presided over the council, making a speech, in which he traced the rise and progress of the idea in favor of union. The objects of the alliance will be principally to aid weak and oppressed churches, collect and distribute information about the church, and entertain all questions relating to the work of evangelization. The name adopted for the new organization is, "Alliance of the Reformed Church Throughout the World."

—The Missionary Herald gives an interesting account of the recent conflagration at Osaka, Japan. The fire commenced in the center of the city, and for twenty-four hours had its own way, burning a wide path through stores and dwellings and lesser temples, until it was stopped by the great wall around the largest temple grounds in Osaka. Dr. Gordon, of the American Board, at once set himself to providing free rice dinners for the burned-out people, and received a considerable subscription from Kobe for this object. The Japanese are equal to the Chicago people in recovering from their great fires. On Sunday ten thousand people were burned out, and on Monday frame-works were seen going up in every direction, before the fire was wholly repressed. While the ground was still hot and hissing loads of timber were being dragged by coolies into the midst of the ruins.

Our Young People.

THE LITTLE BOY'S WATCH.

Dear little Dick, curled up by the fire,
Sat watching the shadows come and go,
As the dancing flames leaped higher and higher,
Flooding the room with a mellow glow.

His chubby hand on his side was pressed,
And he turned for a moment a listening ear;
"Mother," he cried, "I've got a watch!
I can feel it ticking right under here!"

"Yes, Dick, 'tis a watch that God has made
To mark your hours as they fly away;
He holds the key in his mighty hand,
And keeps it in order night and day.

"Should he put aside the mystic key,
Or lay his hand on the tiny spring,
The wheels would stop and your watch run down,
And lie in your bosom a lifeless thing."

He crept to my side and whispered soft,
While his baby voice had an awe-struck sound:
"I wish you would ask him, mother dear,
To be sure and remember to keep it wound!"

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 13.

HOW SOME FOLKS ROB BEES.

"MY DEAR CHILDREN: Can any of you tell me where we left off?"

"I think, grandpa, we had just got to the 'tory about 'How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest,'" says Charlie.

"No we hadn't," says Tom; "you were telling us about bees."

But are you sure, Tom, I hadn't finished. I would like very much to get to that story; the children are getting so impatient. Why, in the last ADVOCATE there were three such pretty letters, and all asking for the story.

"I am sure, grandpa, you hadn't finished about bees. Don't you remember you said you hadn't time to tell us all about them?"

Well, for that matter I mightn't get through in a year; but haven't we said enough?

"Why, grandpa, you haven't told us half of it. You haven't told us what they feed on, nor how they guard and ventilate their hives, nor how they make the cells, nor about their enemies, nor how to rob them, nor about the Bombus Muscorum, nor the Bombus Lapedarius, nor the Megachile, nor the Anthopora, nor the Xylocopa Violacea, nor the Osmia Papaveris, nor the Meliponas, nor the—"

That will do, Tom. I don't much care if I never do tell about such long-named creatures as those. Look here, Tom, let me give you a bit of advice. Don't you see you are getting unpopular? Why, nearly all our little folks are up in arms about you, and want you to hush up.

"I can't help it, grandpa. That only shows how little they know about it. I didn't give them the long names. I only call them what they are put down in the books. I didn't make the books; and even you, grandpa, are always telling me that I must study my books."

Tom, you are a most unnatural kind of a boy. I don't know what to think of you. What have you to say, Harry? Had we got to the story about "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest?"

"Well, to tell the truth, grandpa, I don't think we had. Don't you remember you told Tom that bees don't make honey, and you told me that bees are lazy, or something like it?"

Oh, yes; I remember now. That is a fact. How does the nursery song go?

"How does the little busy bee
Improve each shining hour,
And gather honey all the day
From every opening flower."

The verse agrees with me on one point. The bees gather the honey; they don't make it.

"Oh, yes, I know," says Tom; "they gather the honey-dew, don't they, grandpa?"

Yes, sometimes. Honey-dew is a sweet substance left on leaves by plant lice, which your books call Aphides, I suppose; and the bees and ants gather it; but most honey is the juice of plants, which undergoes a slight change in the body of the bee. Men can make a very good imitation of honey from sugar, but they can't make sugar—I mean like cane-sugar—from honey yet.

"But, grandpa, what made you say bees are lazy? Don't they work all the time?"

No, Harry, they stop just as soon as they think they have got enough honey stowed away to last them through the winter; and if you want them to lay up more you must punish them.

"Punish them, grandpa! How in the world can you punish bees?"

By taking away a part of their honey, and then they will go to work and gather more. You have all seen me rob my bees. Do you remember that I always thump on the hive for a minute or so before I remove the boxes?

"I do," says Charlie. "You play like a dum."

Yes, just like a drum, Charlie; and if you will listen I will tell you how I found out that this was the best way.

When I was a little boy, and lived way up in Maine, where I killed the bear, the houses all had brick ovens in them to bake beans, brown bread and Indian pudding for Sunday's breakfast and dinner, and these ovens were so deep that they used very long wood in them. Well, one cold winter day my father went down into the woods with his ax and oxen and sled—a "hob-sled" they called it, because it was not long, but hobbed off short, just to let one end of a log rest on it, while the other dragged on the snow. Well, he went down to get a log to make into oven-wood. He cut down a fine large tree of white pine, and hauled it out into the clearing, and went back for another. When he came back with the other it was so late that instead of putting both on the sled, as he had intended, he left the first one in the clearing and went home with the other. The next morning before day one of the neighbors, whose name was Sheb. Heroman, came and wanted to buy the log which was left in the clearing; but father wouldn't sell it, because he wanted it for oven-wood. When Sheb. found he couldn't get it he said: "Well, I suppose to be honest I ought to tell you that there is a swarm of bees in that tree." Father told him that they would go and get it, and if there was he would go him halves on the honey. So they took a cross-cut saw and the long sled, and went down and sawed off a length where Sheb. said the bees were, and before they took the sawed piece out they slipped some large pieces of zinc in the saw cuts, and nailed them on to the ends, so the bees couldn't get out. Then they put the piece of log that had the bees in it on to the sled, and started the oxen for the house. Now just opposite the house is the top of a very steep hill, which we boys used to slide down with our hand-sleds. We could go way to the grave-yard gate in good times, and this was fully a quarter of a mile. At this particular time the hill was glare, as we called it—that is, as smooth as ice—and when the sled with the bees on it got opposite this hill-top it took a sudden lurch, or sled round, as they call it there; and, though the oxen held the sled, the log rolled off, and went over and over down the steep hill. Buck was along—the big dog, you know, who thought he killed the bear—and he commenced barking, and ran after the log as hard as he could go. Well, after a bit one of the pieces of zinc came off and let some of the bees out, just as Buck got up to the log, and one of them stung him in the end of the nose as he was running, and he put his nose down to rub it off, without having time to stop, and his nose caught on a lump of ice, and over he went, heels over head, rolling and tumbling over and over, he and the bee-log together; and the bees thought it was Buck that was shoving them, and lots of them got after him and stung him, and there was a terrible time of it.

Well, I jumped on my sled and got down there almost as soon as they did; and though I was afraid to go to the log at first when I saw the plight poor Buck was in, yet, as the bees seemed to be still, I ventured up at last, and found them as quiet as kittens. We just split open the log and took out all the honey we wanted, and there was lots of it. We left enough to winter the bees, and took all the rest. Ever since I have drummed on the hive when I go to rob the bees. The books all say that when the bees are frightened they fill themselves at once with honey, and when full of honey they are like a man just after a good dinner—too good-natured to hurt anybody. If you have any favor to ask of any one, it is a good plan to ask him just after he has had a good dinner.

"Harry, 'ets ask him to-morrow night, after dinner, to tell "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest," says Charlie.

Good-night, my little ones. Here comes mamma.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From Our Little Friends.

WESSON, Miss., July 30, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl just ten years old. My mother takes your paper, and I read it every week; and I am like some of the other little girls who write to you—so much interested in "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest" that I thought I would write you a few lines and ask if Grandpa Goodale would not gratify my curiosity by telling me "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." I live in the little town of Wesson, quite a thriving place; one large factory in operation, and another one will be completed this fall or winter. We have also a good Sabbath school, and I attend regularly every Sabbath. I love the Sabbath school very much, and my teacher!—I cannot say too much in praise of her.

Well, I guess this letter is quite long enough for a little girl; so I will close, hoping soon to hear "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest."

Your little friend,

LILLIE J. HALLAM.

HE who gives a trifle meanly is far meaner than the trifle.

SEASHORE EDITING.

Our exchauges read delightfully out here. Only the choicer journals are perused, and it is passing pleasant to us in this dreamy atmosphere to look up from the printed page to the sky and out on the water. We lose the thread of the argument momentarily while watching a distant sail, wondering whither bound, and who may be on board, and then musing on life as an ocean, and all the people as sailing o'er the solemn main.

The vis a vis of our shore is Ship Island—made somewhat notorious during "the late unpleasantness" as the place where Butler sent many of the refractory and rebellious citizens of New Orleans. The island is twelve miles away, and we can see the trees which grow thickly on the eastern end. At night the light of the lighthouse gleams out brightly and steadily. For these four years we have watched it, and it is always there. In storm and calm, as the night comes down upon the sea, it streams out and flashes across the deep. Even so does the apostle admonish Christians to "hold forth the word of life." They are the lighthouses of the world, planted here and there upon dangerous coasts, to warn, to direct and to cheer the voyagers who traverse the perilous deep. The steady and true light of the faithful Christian is a blessing to every community. Christ's disciples are to see to it that they have the light, and that they hold it forth. There are differences and degrees, from the ancient wood-fires that blazed on the headlands of the Troad in the times of Homer, and that were kindled on the Alexandrian Pharos, to the grand Fresnel burner which illuminates the furious billows that break upon Minot's Ledge. Let us covet earnestly the best gifts. God has made believers to shine, and they must be as the lighthouse, always bright, and lifting up the word of life that it may be seen from afar. Unfaithfulness may lead to the shipwreck of immortal souls, and there will be a fearful account for somebody to render when the sea shall give up its dead.

We have been thinking of the Sea of Galilee, and whether the same sorts of fish are in it now as of yore, when Peter, James and John drew their nets in those waters. What kind were they that came up in that miraculous draught, and what were those on which the risen Savior and the disciples dined? The fishermen drag their nets about here, and when they come to view the spoil we think of course of the parable wherein "the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind." There are cat-fish, croakers, mullets, flounders, stingarees, sardines, red-fish. They are of every kind, and the good are gathered into vessels, the bad are cast away. There is something of the gospel in our surroundings besides the memories of the sermons and songs of the meeting. We might well enough infer the toil and difficulty of those who are fishers of men. Not every haul of the drag-net amounts to much—sometimes there is almost total failure—and when there is a full net the results must be discounted largely, and the actual gain can be estimated with accuracy only by the final sorting. "I have received so many into the church this year. The conversions at our protracted meeting were several score." When the great net of the kingdom is drawn to shore we shall know more about it than we do now. The separation cannot well be in time, but the angels will do it in the last day. "Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is."

We might moralize on fishing with hook and line somewhat, although the Scripture allusions are generally to the drag-net. "Canst thou draw out leviathan with a hook?" It is difficult to draw out even a croaker or a sheep-head in that way here. Fishermen's luck! Some luck, perhaps, but, as in all human pursuits, there is more in skill and judgment. We must regard the tides, the winds, the time of day, the bait, the size of the hook, and then there is a deft way of jerking the rod at exactly the right time. A beneficent Providence has stored the waters with food for man, but it must be sought with care. It is good for us, as well as for the fish, that there must be patient effort, skill and contrivance. There is no telling how lazy and enervated people living on the sea would become if they were not compelled to catch their fish before eating them. Even our friend, Counselor Foster, is abroad in the ebbing tide with sack and scoop-net, looking for the luscious soft-shells. It is well for him, the president of our board of trustees, and well for his boys and ours that the cook and frying-pan wait their return. The world owes us a living, and so does the sea. We challenge these belligerents to lay down their arms and surrender their tressures, but the Spartan answer is tongued in every mine and roared in every wave: "Come and take them."

There are those who are fishing for fortune, for fame, for happiness. Even puffs and compliments are fished for, as newspaper men know. Churches are fishing for brilliant preachers, and ambitious fishers of men are seeking for the smoothest waters wherein to ply their vocation. A contributor this week thinks the fraternity manufacturers are fishing for something. It is a specious bait, of which wise fish will be shy. Hold on to the action of the General Conference, and leave the question where it has been put by the rightful authority. We shall be a loving nation and a happy family after awhile. If one or two considerable fish are caught on this line by a real memorial Limerick, it would be exceedingly fishy in them to assume to represent the ocean and its inhabitants. Don't swoop us all up before the time, and don't put us all on the string before we have even nibbled at the golden bait. The harpoon of military force, the drag-net of disintegration and absorption, still plied with special perseverance in the Black and German seas, and the cast-net of local proselyting, have been tried. Now it is angling. Both angling and wrangling will give place in time to charity and a good understanding.

The porpoise is a rather funny creature. There was a school of them close into shore this morning. They remind us, in their gambols, of a good-natured herd of swine. There is a certain awkward grace in their movements as they rise and snort, and go down again, displaying their sleek round backs and rigid fins and tails. It is all pleasantry with them, but they are intent on business, and the mullets and croakers are fleeing before them, and sometimes jumping far out of the water to escape their hilarious but powerful enemies. There is no more concord in the sea than on the land. The strong devour the weak, the feeble fall a prey to the more alert and vigorous. O for a golden rule for sea and land—for a panacea for selfishness! The big fish are after the little ones. Might, not right, is the law of the sea. Fishes and men, oceans and nations, are much alike. The gospel will at last bring peace to the world, and Ephraim and Judah shall cease to vex each other.

We do not much like the sea. It is dark, dismal, awful. Its music is like sighs and dirges. It is a vast organ, whose keys are tuned for a requiem, and whose pipes are the prison-houses of sad and despairing spirits. Whatever balm there may be in this breeze, and whatever tonic in these briny waves, we love to think of that glorious epoch when there shall be no more sea.

FRATERNITY AND THE SOUTH.

That there has been for the past twelve months a decided and persistent effort by certain prominent gentlemen of the Methodist Episcopal Church South to create a flood of fraternal feeling toward the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) is manifested by their various actions, letters and speeches reported in the public prints, secular and religious. But their assumed leadership in this grand moral movement has not been so closely followed by the populace as they seem to have imagined would be the case. They have failed to get up the flood, and the failure is recognized throughout the North, as well as in the South. The style and temper of their latest published praises of their Northern brethren, as well as the spitefulness of their latest censures of their Southern brethren, indicate deep disappointment and chagrin at the meager results of their distinguished labors and generous sacrifices.

Why is this so? How does it happen that the volunteer vanguard of the "Immortal sixty" raised the banner so far in the front, and call so beseechingly to the solid ranks behind to rally in double quick, and the solid ranks move up so slowly, if they move at all?

Here is evidently a problem—a grave one—a problem of ambitious love disappointed. Let no man say the solution is in a fixed purpose of the Southern Church to live in hostility, for such is not the fact. Our church sought fraternity years ago, and was contemptuously spurned. Ever since that sad hour she has been willing to have peace and brotherhood, but only on terms honorable to herself, and not dishonorable to others. Whenever such terms shall be offered in good faith they will be accepted in good faith, not only by our representatives in General Conference assembled, but by the working body of ministers and members at home. The failure of "the Fraternity Manufacturing Company" is not to be traced to this cause, but to others—one of which is this: they have tried to make Christian love out of the wrong kind of raw material. In all their operations they have used too much policy, and too many kinds of it. Such stuff can never be worked up into religious brotherhood. Sooner might one expect the coarse clay in the potter's hand to take the graceful form and expressive beauty of the finest marble statuary.

For instance, one gentleman has written a series of articles, and nearly all his argument turns upon the political results he imagines would follow from the fraternity of the two great Methodisms. His argument is about in this form when stripped of all but the argument: Gen. Washington and other great men achieved American independence, and gave the country a constitution and a flag; therefore we ought to love one another, and in the bonds of Methodism bind together in indissoluble union the distant parts of this political fabric. His exhortation is: Be fraternal for the sake of patriotism. This looks very much like the policy of ambition—sounds like the talk of one looking out for political office.

Another of these gentlemen, in a speech made in Louisville, said there were torpedoes, magazines or volcanoes (really, Mr. Editor, I forget which word he used, but I remember it was a horrible instrument of death, and smelled very strongly of sulphur) ready to explode right under us if our church did not walk in the path marked out, and shake hands at the very time and spot the North should choose. Whether that dreadful death-dealing thing was in Washington city or in the General Conference of the Northern Church, or whether it was in both, and where the explosion was to take place, the speaker did not say. But this matters nothing. He seemed to think we had better love those brethren, and do it soon, than incur the danger of the explosion. He forgot that there is no brimstone in love, and I am sure it was the policy of fear that caused him to take such a stand.

Another, suddenly seized with a high ambition to memorize in brick and mortar the American labors of Mr. Wesley, steams off on a fraternal visit to Round Lake, to take up a collection from the wealth and aristocracy assembled on that consecrated Methodist Olympia. From the listed Agonistes the champion, Dr. Ives, being called out, steps forth to haranguo the vast multitude and pass round the hat. Now it is generally understood that this peculiarly affectionate doctor said, not many months ago, in Boston, that the biggest rascals in the South were Methodists—that strychnine was good for them; and, borrowing the expression of a military acquaintance, that he had rather live in hell than in Texas. I am aware that the announcement is seriously made that this distinguished doctor of divinity has been really converted; but, notwithstanding this important fact, the whole transaction has the appearance of policy—the despicable policy, too, of a moneyed interest.

Another thing about this company is that in proportion as they fall in love up there, just about in the same proportion do they seem to fall out of love down here. The measure of praise they give the North is about the measure of censure they give the South. This is remarkable, but it is so. When they get to Round Lake they fare so sumptuously, and hear so much eloquence and get off so much themselves, and read so many mottoes, and see so many wreaths and festoons and flags, and hear so much of ovations, and feel so patriotic, and all that, that it is no wonder they are "charmed with the place and the people," and come down to praise them and censure us. You know it is said: "Flesh and blood can't stand everything." But it looks hard for us who have never beheld those scenes of loveliness, and felt the buoyancy and lift of soul given by those vast multitudes, to be rapped over the head for our stupidity and cold-heartedness. But we have to take it, from the General Conference down—bishops, doctors, editors, preachers, laymen, all. One of these gentlemen we once heard boast in a speech that he "surrendered on the last ten acres of the Southern Confederacy," and he rung the changes on the words until the blood boiled in every vein, and in admiration we exclaimed: "Heros invincibilis!"

Another has paraded for years the fact that he quit that church of wealth and power and politics, and, like Abraham, Wesley, Chalmers, Guthrie and other grand historic characters, went out, not knowing whither—knowing only that he went without bread and without money.

Now these gentlemen chide us for want of confidence—complain that we follow afar off; appear at times really to think less of us whom they warned than of those against whom they warned us, and actually attempt to terrify us with the resistless "moving throne of Mr. Wesley." These gentlemen should remember that spaniels are whipped into love, and not men.

In conclusion let me say that this "Fraternity Manufacturing Company" having failed, had now better dissolve, and try to do no more business in this line. They would never have organized if they had only considered that time alone has the peculiar power of tranquilizing the deep sorrow and anger of earnest natures. This is a controversy of mingled sorrow and anger—of anger more than sorrow on the part of the North, I fear; of sorrow more than anger on the part of the South, I solemnly believe. Let it alone. Its settlement cannot be hastened by intermeddling hands. In the future there will be agreeable associations between the churches; but to bring this about is beyond the achievement of one man or of many. ***

Colorado and Montana.

From a letter in the Nashville Christian Advocate, by Bishop Marvin, written from Denver, July 16, we make the following extract:

At about two hundred miles from the Missouri State line, more or less, the road enters upon the region known as the plains. This is a vast region of level country, stretching eastward from the base of the Rocky mountains for hundreds of miles. It is not absolutely level, like a floor—that is, not all of it, nor most of it, though a good deal of it is—but the elevations are slight, and the undulations, for the most part, gentle. Indeed there are no bold bills from the Rocky mountains to the Missouri river, a distance of over six hundred miles. Much of this vast region is unsettled, and must forever be, as it is not fit for cultivation. In the greater part of the western portion of it the land is sandy and sterile, and, in addition to that, the rains are not sufficient for the growth of grains; nor are there sufficient streams for irrigation, except near the mountains. The valley lands near the mountains, where they are irrigated, produce remarkably well. So that the portion of Colorado lying along near the base of the mountains, and in some of the mountain valleys, has a good deal of agricultural wealth. But its great source of wealth is in its gold and silver mines in the mountains. These are amazingly rich.

I arrived in Denver on time on Thursday evening, and met the Rev. W. C. Hearn, the pastor, in company with Maj. Isaac Brinker, at the depot. The major was the quartermaster of Gen. Price's command during the war. With him and his assistant, Capt. Harry Pflager, I had my mess during the greater part of the time I was in camp.

The brethren in Colorado informed me that they could not get to Conference in Montana. It is about a thousand miles to the northwest, and would cost them fully $200 apiece to go and come. Now these men have no $200 apiece. I do not suppose that all of them taken together have $200. They cannot go, so I am stopping here two or three days, holding a preliminary meeting with the brethren, and getting ready to attend to their business for them at Conference.

The brethren have had a hard time this year, for has not the grasshopper visited Colorado also? Ay, indeed has he, and the grasshopper is a burden. In so new a field the support of the ministry is always meager, and when, in such a field, the grasshopper comes the preacher suffers. To make matters worse, only one-half of the missionary appropriation was paid, and so our brethren have been on famine rations, almost literally. Some of them have been obliged to help themselves by devoting a portion of their time to secular employments.

The year has not been one of great prosperity in the church. But perhaps the wonder is that the church has held its own under all the discouragements of the situation, and the fact that it has done so, and made some advance, is proof of its vital hold upon the country, and shows the self-denying devotion of the preachers to great advantage. God is not yet without witnesses in the world, nor in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. There are still men who are willing to labor and to suffer for the cause of the Master.

I expect to remain here over Sunday, and then start forward on the long, fatiguing trip to Helena. From that point, if God will, I will write again.

OUR CHURCH IN SAN FRANCISCO.

We rejoice in the fact that our brethren in San Francisco have a good church at last. They found one ready to their hand, built by the Baptists, and they have it at a bargain. It is to be known as St. Paul's Methodist church. We take the following items from the Pacific Methodist of July 30:

The building is 63 feet frontage on Russ street, by a total depth of 93 feet, including the towers. The body of the church is 57x88 feet, and is divided as follows, viz.: In the basement there is a stair hall, or principal vestibule, 14 feet deep, by the width of the building. At each end of this vestibule there are elegant large stairways leading to the main floor, and also a six-feet passage leading from the vestibule to the lecture and Sunday school room. At each side of this passage there are large rooms, used for ladies' parlor, prayer meetings, infant and Bible class rooms, etc. The lecture-room is 44x55 feet, well lighted, and connects with the two rooms mentioned by large sliding doors; which, when opened, gives an additional length to the lecture-room of 16 feet. At the rear of the lecture-room there is the library-room, two robing-rooms, closets, furnace-room, etc., and also two flights of stairs to the rear of the pulpit. There are supplies of water, with hose bibs, at both front and rear of the building.

At the head of the main stairways there is a spacious vestibule on the main floor, leading to the main audience-room, which is very neatly and beautifully arranged and finished. The size of the audience-room of the church is 55 feet wide, by a length or depth of 72 feet, independent of the stairway, etc., with an additional length above the vestibule of about 12 feet, making the total length of ceiling about 84 feet. The walls and ceiling are finished in white coat, with wainscoting five feet high, of alternate redwood and Port Orford white cedar, with heavily molded caps of white cedar. The ceiling is elliptic and 35 feet high. Along the center line there are two very elaborately molded large figures around the gas drops, and 13 others of smaller dimensions in other parts of the ceiling, the crowns of which are raised three inches above the ceiling of the church, thus giving a free ventilation of three inches all around each figure. Along the side walls there are appropriate cornices, the tops of which are left open for ventilating purposes, which, with the ventilation about the ceiling figures, gives to this church a more perfect and complete ventilation than is to be found in any other room of the same size in the city.

The front of the building is grand and imposing. The height from the ground to the top of the center pinnacle is 87 feet. The house was built in 1870, and is now as good as new in every important respect, evidencing the careful and judicious management of the gentlemen who superintended its erection. The total cost of the house, with its furniture, carpets, organ, heating apparatus, etc., was near $28,000; the cost of the ground was $9,500. It is situated within a few yards of Columbia Square, on Russ street, a broad avenue running from Folsom to Howard street, between Sixth and Seventh streets. Three of the principal lines of street railroads run within one-half block of the church, making it accessible from the most remote parts of the city. The population about the church is already dense.

No doubt many of our readers who are greatly interested in our welfare may surmise, as did our good Bro. Chamberlin, that there must be some defect in the property to warrant its sale at the extremely low figure that was really paid. But the secret is easy to understand. Our Baptist brethren, for reasons of their own, concluded to consolidate this church with Tabernacle Baptist church, Post street, and build a magnificent structure on Fifth street. This movement compelled them to abandon both houses. A church is not marketable property. They were unable to find a purchaser until they offered it to us at such figures as we could easily pay. The house and grounds are really worth $35,000. The price paid by us was $17,000. A few thousand dollars will be required to refit the house in the most elegant style, and this amount can be raised with the assistance of such of our friends as desire to contribute, so that by the last Sunday in September we can rededicate our church entirely free from any burden of debt.

NEVER attempt to do anything that is not right. Just as surely as you do you will get into trouble. Sin always brings sorrow sooner or later. If you even suspect that anything is wicked, do it not until you are sure that your suspicions are groundless.

THE faith which works by love lifts the foe squarely, since faith allows not of despair, nor love admits a false security.—Luther.

A THEORY serves to connect facts as a string holds together the pearls of a necklace. The theory itself is often as valueless as the string.

A SAD BEREAVEMENT.

We are pained exceedingly to hear of the sorrow that has come upon Bro. and Sister Leith. Bro. Leith was with us at Seashore camp meeting, abundant in labors, and blessed in his deed. When we parted with him the other day we did not think that he was so soon to be thus sorely tried. May God support the bereaved parents. Bro. Leith writes us as follows:

JACKSON, MISS., August 9, 1875.

DEAR BRO.: We are here on our way to Brandon, with the remains of our sweet little daughter Lillian, for interment. She died near Memphis, on Saturday last, of general congestion, having been sick about thirty hours. This blow of the divine hand falls upon us with almost crushing weight. The waves and billows are passing over.

My wife is wonderfully sustained. My confidence in God is unshaken. My faith lifts me above all selfish considerations, until I can say: "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

Bespeak for us the prayers of our brethren and friends. I am, dear brother,

Yours in the very best bonds,

WILL. H. LEITH.

THE NOTE below brings us intelligence of a serious hurt to the presiding elder of the Prattville district, Alabama Conference. We sincerely hope that Bro. Shores will soon recover.

GEORGIANA, ALA., August 10, 1875.

To the Preachers and People of Prattville District, Alabama Conference:

I would take this method of informing you that my father, your presiding elder, has met with a severe accident, caused by a fall from his buggy.

Both bones of his left leg, above the ankle, are broken; his right hip is also badly fractured. We brought him home (about twelve miles) on a litter, and he is doing as well as could be expected, but he will not be able to meet his appointments for some time. We hope that he will have the prayers and sympathies of his brethren in this hour of his sore affliction. We feel very grateful to the community in which the accident occurred, to friends at home and elsewhere, who have extended great kindness to us.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. SHORES.

THE Pacific Methodist of July 23 has a paragraph on the Pacific Methodist College at Santa Rosa. Miss Werlein goes there from New Orleans. We are sorry to lose her from our society here, and we can assure our friends of Santa Rosa that she will prove a valuable accession to the institution. The Pacific Methodist says:

The trustees of Pacific Methodist College have done important work this week. We are not acquainted with Prof. Jones, but his record is good. Bro. Chamberlin, the successor to Prof. Hoss, is a man of rare qualifications. We regret that anything should call him from the pulpit where he has accomplished so much good, and for which he is so well fitted by grace and culture. Though we have not seen him in reference to the change, yet we know that the reasons must be imperative that will cause him to resign his vocation as a preacher of the gospel. He will do well for the college. Miss Werlein is highly indorsed, both as a refined and devout Methodist lady and a finished musician. She will no doubt make the study of music a specialty in the college course.

WE CALL special attention to the advertisement of the Greenville Collegiate Institute, male and female college, which appears in this issue of the ADVOCATE. President Dyer is well known among us here in New Orleans, and also throughout Louisiana and Alabama. The institution at Greenville is under the patronage of the Alabama Conference, and is doing an important work in the way of educating our youth. The situation is healthful, the faculty excellent, the community a good one.

REV. W. P. H. CONNERLY, writing from Pine Level, August 5, says:

I think, from all I can learn, that a disastrous drouth has been and is prevailing throughout our Conference. The cotton is cut very short, and corn is badly damaged. I have had one revival of great power, and have faith to look for others. Methodism is taking higher ground, and more definitely opposing itself to error and sin.

Publisher's Department.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondents can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La..... $2 00
Nov. 16, 1874—From Canton, Miss..... 2 00
June 14, 1875—From Selma, Ala..... 5 00
Nov. 24, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine..... 2 00
Dec. 3, 1874—From Jas. Williams, Isney, Ala. 5 00
Apr. 5, 1875—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn..... 2 00
June —, 1875—From Baton Rouge, La..... 2 50
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss..... 2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed. Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and run more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

E. E. F. ROSS, Esq., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

HUNTSVILLE HIGH SCHOOL.—From one of our exchanges we clip the following editorial in reference to the above-named institution:

"We publish this morning the advertisement of the Huntsville (Ala.) High School, located in one of the most healthy and beautiful of our Southern cities. The principal of this excellent institution, the Rev. Dr. D. C. B. Connerly, late of the celebrated 'Stonewall Institute,' in south Alabama, is well known to many of the leading citizens of our county as one of the most thorough scholars and accomplished teachers in the land, having been engaged with unvarying success in the cause of education for the last twenty-five years, during which time over three thousand boys and young men—many of whom now fill the highest of public stations—received through his efforts that mental and moral training that is essential to success in the life struggle for laurels and the esteem of good men. Circulars, containing full particulars, sent on application."

CARPENTERS AND BUILDERS will do well to examine the advertisements and cuts illustrating some of the valuable labor-saving machinery of Messrs. Frank & Co., Buffalo, N. Y. This house is reported to us as an excellent and worthy firm, enjoying the full confidence of merchants and mechanics in their own city. Their descriptive catalogue will greatly assist those who want to save labor by the use of machinery. Address Frank & Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

IRON COLUMNS, LINTELS AND CORNICES.—Messrs. Shorer & Taillie, 145 and 147 Water street, Rochester, N. Y., are represented to us by those who know them as most worthy and estimable gentlemen and successful manufacturers. Those engaged in building, or in furnishing builders' hardware and materials, should read their advertisement in another column.

CENTENARY FEMALE COLLEGE.—The above most excellent institution, under the presidency of our worthy friend and brother, Rev. A. D. McVoy, will open its thirty-fifth session on the fourth of October. Summerfield, the place of location, is blessed with good society, good health, and the school is well and ably conducted. See advertisement elsewhere.

MACHINERY.—George Place, Esq., 121 Chambers street and 103 Reade street, New York, advertises in this issue his splendid stock of machinery. Do not fail to give him a call if needing anything in the line of shafting, hangers, pulleys, couplings, belting, etc., or send for illustrated catalogue to his address.

EXCELSIOR WIRE WORKS.—The establishment of Joseph Hadleton, wire worker and manufacturer of every kind of wire goods, is well worthy of attention. The convenience and economy of many articles of wire goods is just beginning to be appreciated. See advertisement in another column.

BOTANICAL REMEDIES.—Dr. T. Swan, who inserts a card in another column, headed "To the Afflicted Public," is reported to us by the commercial agencies and from other sources as having the confidence and respect of his acquaintances. See his advertisement.

AMERICAN CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.—The above institution is well and favorably reported of. See advertisement in another column, and for further information address Prof. Henry Schroeder, director, 141 Fifth avenue, near Nineteenth street, New York.

WE DIRECT ATTENTION to the card of the Spingler House, Union Square, New York. Convenience and economy are combined in the advantages offered by the Spingler House.

NIGHT SCENES IN THE BIBLE.—J. C. McCurdy & Co., of St. Louis, Mo., advertise for agents to canvass for the above magnificent book. See advertisement.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.—The advertisement of this gin will be found in our paper of to-day, and our friends in the country would do well to note the advantages it has over most gins now in use. As an evidence of its superiority it is claimed that more of these gins have been sold from this point than any other for the past two years. All sizes are kept on hand at the depot in this city. Messrs. Gaisan Bros. are the general agents, and will give prompt attention to all inquiries addressed to them. Their office is at 39 Perdido street.

SCHOOL AND CHURCH FURNITURE.—Those in need of furniture for churches, schools or halls should not fail to send for catalogue and price lists to M. W. Chase, Nos. 212 and 214 Seventh street, Buffalo, N. Y. Mr. Chase, we are assured, is a most worthy gentleman, and keeps on hand or manufactures to order such articles as may be wanted in his line. He guarantees satisfaction to purchasers. See advertisement.

EXCELSIOR PICTURE FRAME MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—The advertisement of the above company appears in our issue of to-day. Dealers and consumers will do well to observe it. Every one engaged in any kind of business which enables him to handle to advantage picture frames or brackets should send to the above company, 73 Martin street, Rochester, N. Y.

H. D. ROGERS & CO.,
(Late of Baker, Rogers & Co.,)
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENTS.
22 W. Fourth St. (Merchants' Exchange Building,) CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Orders for all kinds of Merchandise and Manufactured Goods filled at the lowest market rates; and any information needed regarding prices or other matters connected with the trade promptly furnished.

Our office is in the entrance to the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 20 and 22 West Fourth street, where its many members are constantly passing, gives us the best of facilities for exhibiting samples of Grain, Cotton and Manufactured Articles, which advantage we offer to those desiring our services.

From the Cincinnati Price Current, March 13, 1868.

"We desire to call the attention of merchants in the interior to the card of Messrs. H. D. Rogers & Co., which is published in another column. This firm proposes introducing a new business, namely filling orders for any kind of Merchandise or Manufactured Goods to be found in this market, charging only a small commission, thus enabling country merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and indeed all classes, to procure any article they may need at the lowest cash price, without incurring the expenses of coming to the city. And as Mr. Rogers is thoroughly conversant with the city trade in all its departments, and one whose integrity and fidelity to the interests of his customers are of the highest order, no doubts need be entertained by those sending their orders to this firm that they will be faithfully attended to."

Quotations furnished on application. Shippers and others forwarding samples will have their value ascertained, and an offer made, if practicable.

With an experience of twenty years in merchandising in this city, we can offer the best facilities and references. jy22 3m

Farm, Garden and Household.

Rules for Success.

A correspondent of the Fancier's Journal gives the following very sensible advice to beginners in breeding poultry:

Consult your own fancy in regard to what variety of fowls, pigeons, rabbits, etc., that you will keep, and do not be influenced in this matter by any one; which ever breed or variety you fancy is the one you will best succeed with.

Keep but one breed, and endeavor by close attention and careful study to bring it as near perfection as possible.

Remember that exhibition of prize birds will not always produce premium birds. If you begin with fowls or adult stock of any kind, get some reliable man, who is acquainted with the variety you wish to breed, to select and mate your stock for you. Some novices will go into a show-room and purchase a first premium trio of fowls regardless of cost. Such birds often breed nothing but trash, they not being properly mated.

If you commence by buying eggs, order them from a reliable breeder, of whom there are many who advertise. If you are afraid of the perils incident to a long journey by express, purchase of some breeder near your own locality. This, however, is a matter of small importance if the eggs be fresh and fertile.

Always have your sitting hens ready and accustomed to their nests by the time the eggs arrive. If it is necessary to remove a hen from one nest to another, do so at night rather than in the day-time, as she will be more likely to stick to her new nest. In warm weather make the nest on the ground.

Sprinkle flour of sulphur over and around your sitting hens to keep them free from vermin. Ruffle their feathers and their backs, and dust them thoroughly. Never grease a hen while she is sitting; if you do, not a chick will you get. If convenient, provide a small yard for your hens to dust and exercise themselves in; keep corn and water constantly by them; watch them closely for the first seven days, and see that they do not remain off too long. A hen should not stay off from her eggs longer than fifteen or twenty minutes in cold weather; but at this season an hour or two will not injure them.

After your hen has been sitting eight or ten days, go to her at night with a strong light and examine the eggs, and remove the unfertile ones; these you can easily discern by holding them up before the light, in the following manner: Hold the egg in the right hand, small end down, between the thumb and forefinger; now place the little finger of the left hand across the top or middle of the large end of the egg, close the left hand slightly in such a way as to shade the eyes, and throw the light into the egg; hold the egg a little below rather than on a level with the blaze of the lamp. Those eggs having chicks in them will appear quite dark, except a small portion near the top. Those that are unfertile will be quite clear, like new-laid eggs, and should be removed at once, as they generate gases which often cause them to burst and smear the good eggs, sometimes spoiling a whole nest. A little practice will enable the novice to detect the fertile from the unfertile ones by the tenth day. With Leghorn and Spanish eggs the difference can be seen much sooner than with the eggs of Brahmas or Cochins, as the eggs of the two latter are thicker and darker. An expert can detect the unfertile eggs as early as the fifth or sixth day.

RECIPE FOR PRESERVING MEAT.—As warm weather has come, the following, by a writer in the New York Times, will prove both seasonable and serviceable:

There is no good reason why farmers and their families should eat so much salt pork, leaving all the fresh meat to the inhabitants of cities and villages, when the following method will keep meat fresh for weeks even in the warmest weather. I have tried it for several years. As soon as the animal heat is out of the meat, slice it up ready for cooking. Prepare a large jar by scalding it well with hot salt and water. Mix salt and pulverized saltpeter. Cover the bottom of the jar with a sprinkle of salt and pepper. Put down a layer of meat, sprinkle with salt and pepper the same as if it was just going to the table, and continue in this manner until the jar is full. Fold a cloth or towel, and wet it in strong salt and water in which a little of the saltpeter is dissolved. Press the cloth closely over the meat and set it in a cool place. Be sure and press the cloth in tightly as each layer is removed, and your meat will keep for months. It is a good plan to let the meat remain over night, after it is sliced, before packing. Then drain off all the blood that oozes from it. It will be necessary to change the cloth occasionally, or take it off and wash it first in cold water, the scale in salt and water as at first. In this way farmers can have fresh meat all the year round. I have kept beef that was killed on the eleventh of February till the twenty-first of June. Then I packed a large jar of veal in the same way during the dog days, and it kept six weeks. This recipe alone is worth the price of any newspaper in the land.

BIRDS THE FARMER'S FRIENDS.—Not long ago, near Rouen, in the valley of Monville, the crows had for a considerable time been proscribed. The cockchafers accordingly multiplied to such an extent that an entire meadow was pointed out to me as completely withered on the surface. The larvæ had pushed so far their subterranean works that every root of grass had been eaten, and all the turf could be rolled back on itself like a carpet. The multiplication of insects is almost incredible, but our birds seem equal to the emergency. Michelet says: "The swallow is not satisfied with less than 1,000 flies per diem; and a pair of sparrows carry home to their young 4,300 caterpillars weekly; a tomtit, 300 daily. The magpie hunts after the insects which lie concealed beneath the bark of the tree and live upon its sap. The humming bird and the fly-catcher purify the chalice of the flower. The bee-eater, in all lands, carries on a fierce hostility with the wasp which ruins our fruit. A large number of insects remain during the winter in the egg of larvæ, waiting for the spring to burst into life; but in this state they are diligently hunted by the mavis, the wren and the troglodyte. The former turn over the leaves which strew the earth, the latter climb to the loftiest branches of the trees, or clean out the trunk. In wet meadows the crows and storks bore the ground to seize the white worm which, for three years before metamorphosing into a cockchafer, gnaws at the roots of our grasses.—The Animal Kingdom.

ADULTERATION OF COFFEE.—Acting upon a hint recently presented by the daily press, Mr. August Hinel, an apothecary of Hamilton, tested the purity of about a pound and a half of green coffee, purchased from a respectable grocer at a respectable price, by pouring over it about a quart of tepid water. The water, poured off about five minutes afterward, was of a deep green color. It was thrown out, however, before an examination was made of it, and the test was accordingly repented upon the same coffee, this time with cold water, in which the coffee was allowed to remain about ten minutes. When poured off it was also a dark green, though perhaps hardly so deeply colored as the first, and was found to be a clear solution of sulphate of copper. This adulteration seems to be used for the purpose of equalizing the color of the beans, and so cover the defects of rotten grains as to render them indistinguishable from the healthy ones. Roasted coffee probably contains as much sulphate of copper as the green, although it is less apparent. The effect of its use is felt in pains and colics, which would be much more general except for the free use in the West of sugar with coffee, sugar being an antidote for copper.—Cincinnati Gazette.

INDOOR CULTURE OF TOMATOES.—The London Gardeners' Chronicle describes a method of raising tomatoes within doors which it says has been successful and is worthy of general adoption. The seed is sown about Christmas, and by the first week in March the plants are set out against the back wall of some of the lean-to vineries in a good compost, with ample root-room. Here they make a rapid and vigorous growth, and in the course of the season attain to a height of ten to twelve feet, and produce successful crops of fruit with great profusion until past Christmas. In this manner early and late tomatoes are obtained from the same plants. As a matter of course the plants can hardly be kept too moist, and a good dressing of crushed bones is occasionally given. The border in which the tomatoes are planted is only about fifteen inches in width. The plants must be well fed; but the wonderful crops they bear is the best testimony to the advantage of a liberal treatment. The weight of fruit obtained from one plant in a season is something remarkable, and many of them attain a great size.

WATCH THE ROOTS.—In some remarks before the Alton Horticultural Society Dr. Hull used the following language as to the way he treated the roots of plants and trees before planting: "The roots of all trees should be examined, and small bruises, made in taking them up, cut out, and the shattered ends cut off with a sharp knife. Have ready a large barrel or tub, half full, or more, of strong tobacco-water. Into this put from a pint to a quart of soap to each bucketful of water; stir until well mixed, and then stand your trees in this two hours or longer before setting. On taking out one lot another may be set in. I have often left trees in over night without injury. This treatment is equally good for grape vines—in fact, for all plants. Immerse vines and small plants tops and all. Remember, all plants may have lice on the roots, and this treatment will kill the last one of them. I have sometimes used unleached ashes, instead of soap and tobacco, with the best results, throwing in two or three quarts to each bucketful of water."

SOUP.—Cut some new carrots and new turnips in the shape of peas, put them in separate saucepans with enough stock to cover them, and a pinch of sugar. Keep them on the fire till the stock has all boiled away, but mind and do not scorch or burn. Cook some peas and asparagus points in the same way. You should have equal quantities of each of these vegetables. Cut out of lettuce and sorrel leaves pieces the size of a sixpence, and let them have one boil in some stock. Put all the vegetables so prepared in the soup tureen, add a few sprigs of chevril, pour over them some well-flavored consommé, and serve.

BREAKFAST ROLLS.—Take a coffeecupful of new milk, two beaten eggs, half a cup of fresh yeast, a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of butter or sweet lard; stir in, briskly, enough flour to make a stiff batter. Mix in this way at tea-time, and cover up to rise. Late in the evening, when the dough is light, mold it out on the board and put it back in the pan and cover again. In the morning tear off, but do not cut, in pieces of sufficient size to twist up into rolls, working as little as possible. When they puff up, bake in a quick oven, and eat while hot.

THE fig-tree thrives best in a rich, mellow soil, and requires a copious supply of water during mid-summer on any of our uplands or dry soils to produce large and well-ripened fruit.

HE lifts his feet high who has put on boots for the first time.

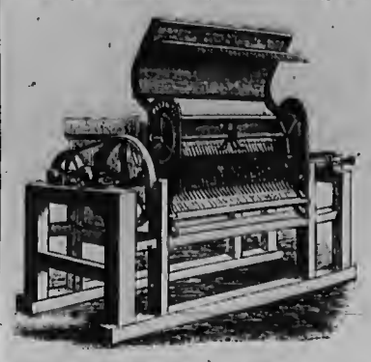
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Scientific.

—A founder in Venice, named Giordani, has discovered a process of bronze-casting by which the cast is made in a single operation, however large its size may be.

—Prof. Proctor has written a letter recently to the London Times commending strongly the American system of weather reports, and suggesting its adoption in Great Britain.

AMMONIA FOR FLOWERS.—Sulphate of ammonia is an excellent liquid to apply to verbenas or any other flower, giving to the foliage a dark green, luxuriant and healthy appearance. It is economical and easily applied. Prepare it the evening before using by dissolving one ounce of ammonia in two gallons of water. It may be applied once a week with safety.

—That the Dionæa and other insect-catching plants have the power of inducing rapid decay in their captives is fully proved; but that these are digested, as we would say if the plants were animals, is not proved to the satisfaction of all naturalists. Observations on this point are therefore still going on. Prof. Balfour, of Edinburg, has recently noted some which he thinks favor the affirmative. A piece of meat placed on the leaf of another plant became putrid and offensive; another piece on a leaf of a Dionæa seemed to dry up, and was always inodorous. This is a strong point. Then Dr. Balfour observed that plants kept under bell-glasses, and by inference free from insects, did not thrive so well as those left free to catch insects to their hearts' content. But this would not be regarded as so good a point as the last, as plants confined under close glasses would not be expected to thrive so well as plants exposed to the atmosphere.

THE KEELY MOTOR.—All the daily papers are discussing the Keely motor. Many papers and many capitalists have faith in the invention. The probabilities seem to be that the Keely motor is a bubble. It is possible that Mr. Keely has discovered some new power, but not likely. The Scientific American says:

"The Keely performance is as follows: Keely blows from his lungs, for a period of thirty seconds, into a nozzle upon the generator. He connects the same nozzle, by means of a small rubber tube, with the hydrant, and lets in five gallons of water under a pressure of 26½ pounds to the inch, then shuts off the water. He opens the valve of a pipe of one-tenth of an inch bore between the generator and a gauge or pressure indicator; and lo! the gauge indicates 10,000 pounds to the square inch. Such, in sum and substance, is the Keely motor, as set forth by the learned counsel of the company, and corroborated by various mechanical experts, in the statements they have now freshly prepared for the especial benefit and enlightenment of the readers of the Scientific American; corroborated also by scores of other intelligent persons, so Mr. Collier assures us. The majority of our readers will doubtless conclude with us that, on the showing of the parties themselves, the whole thing must be classed as a second-rate juggle—a mechanical Katie King arrangement, too contemptible for serious consideration."

On the other hand, Mr. Keely writes to the Scientific American:

"In view of publications in the Scientific American, deriding me and my invention, I feel it to be my duty to depart from my intended policy of making no public declaration relative to my invention. I now publicly assert that I have produced the results which many persons have seen, in the precise manner heretofore stated, to wit: the introduction of atmospheric air into my machine, a limited quantity of natural water direct from the hydrant at no greater than the ordinary hydrant pressure, and the machine itself, which is simply a mechanical structure. With these three agents alone, unaided by any and every chemical compound, heat, electricity or galvanic action, I have produced in an inappreciable period of time, by a simple manipulation of the machine, a vaporic substance, at one expulsion of a volume of ten gallons, having an elastic energy of 10,000 pounds to the square inch. This I assert, and am ready to verify by my oath. I only ask of the public their indulgence until a new and perfect machine, now rapidly approaching completion, is finished, when I will publicly demonstrate that which I now publicly assert.

JOHN W. KEELY.

PHILADELPHIA, June 25, 1875."

The following are a few of the claims which Mr. Keely made to a reporter of a daily paper:

"An ordinary steamship can be run so fast with it that it will be split in two.

"It is vapor of so fine an order that it will penetrate metal. It is lighter than hydrogen, and more powerful than steam or any explosives known.

"I found this vapor capable of exerting power influitely.

"I once drove an engine 800 revolutions a minute, of forty horse-power, with less than a thimbleful of water, and kept it running fifteen days with the same water.

"I experimented with a gun. The target was a four-inch plank placed against a steel plate. My vapor threw the ball with such tremendous force that it went through plank and steel, tearing the bullet in shreds.

"I propose, in about six months, to run a train of thirty cars from Philadelphia to New York at the rate of a mile a minute, with one small engine, and I will draw the power all out of as much water as you can hold in the palm of your hand."

Nicholas Thomas, a mechanic in the car shop in Chicago, states that he has been working for a long time on the principles which developed Keely's new motor, and that he found some time ago arrived at the same conclusions as Mr. Keely, but was not quite ready to give the result of his investigations to the public. He affirms that the motor is all that is claimed, and that it will work a revolution in all branches of industry.

STUDEBAKER WAGON.
FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.
THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!
There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

THE DUBOIS
FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50
By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.
The Flange prevents double, stems sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.
We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.
We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. GELSAN BROTHERS.

On Saturday there was some inquiry, but at prices which factors generally would not accept, and the sales were confined to 110 bales, the bulk of the reduced stock being held by those who adhered steadfastly to their previous pretensions, and with few small parcels pressing on the market to close consignments. On Monday there was some inquiry, and two or three negotiations were pending, but were not consummated. The sales were consequently confined to 0 bales at steady prices. Nothing transpired to indicate any change in prices. On Tuesday there was some inquiry, but mostly at prices which factors would not accept. The sales embraced 230 bales. The bulk of the stock is concentrated in the hands of a few factors, who adhere to their previous pretensions, asking our outside figures, but others, under instructions to close consignments, offer their stocks more freely. Low middling was consequently reported as low as 13c., with some offerings at even a fraction less, but orders of any considerable magnitude could hardly have been filled unless at 13 5/16@13½c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 413 bales, against 910 for the corresponding time last week and 162 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 985,091 bales, against 1,216,709 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 298,436 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 311,760—3,493,293 against 3,805,053. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 37,735 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 13,539 to France, and of 165,267 to other foreign ports. We quote:

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SONG OF THE MUSQUITO.

"Home again, home again,
From a foreign shore!
And oh, it fills my soul with joy
To greet my friends once more!"
(It does, indeed!)

I bring you an new song, my friends,
I wear no fancy clothes;
I know you love me for myself,
For I believe your oaths!
I feel I'm lovely! When I come
For once you're blest indeed.
I know I'm all in all to you;
For me you gladly bleed!

Oh, yes! I am a thing of joy!
My tones are passing sweet;
I thrill you with my melody—
So simple, yet complete!
"Ah! there he is!" you softly cry,
And breathless watch my flight—
Unless, indeed, I have you there,
By coming in the night!

It is not every visitor
Who brings a band along!
Who celebrates his friendliness
In melody and song!
It is a graceful compliment,
Which I can well afford
To those who gladly welcome me—
And furnish all my board!

A serenade at dewy eve—
How grateful to the sense!
Who stays to calculate the cost—
The paltry recompense!
"What cheerful little sprite is this
That carols as he goes?"
You'll learn, my pretty one, when I
Alight upon your nose!

I would not plead for robbery,
I would not use deceit;
And yet, the plain to sensible minds,
Philanthropists must eat!
I dare not taste the juicy grape;
But Nature bids me see
The blood that first was wine in you
May turn to wine in me!

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 18.—There was much excitement to-day in Washington and Jefferson counties on account of a reported attempt by the negroes at insurrection. Eighty arrests were made, and the white military companies in those counties ordered by the Governor to report to the sheriff. The prisoners were all lodged in jail without resistance. The alleged plot contemplated a massacre of the whites on the twentieth instant. It is thought now there will be no further trouble, though the details are meager and indefinite.

CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 18.—Hon. D. M. Key, of this city, has been appointed by the Governor to fill the vacancy in the United States Senate caused by the death of Andrew Johnson.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 19.—Arrests of alleged negro insurrectionists in Johnson, Washington and Jefferson counties were continued. Thirteen armed negroes came into Wrightsville and surrendered themselves. In Burke county a collision between whites and blacks seems hourly immiaent. Both races are under arms, and the negroes are reported massed a few miles from Waynesboro. Whits scouts were fired on by the negroes this morning. The Burke county people sent here to-day for troops, but Gov. Smith declined to let any of the companies go. A number of volunteers left for Waynesboro to-night, and it is feared a fight will soon take place. About one hundred arrests have been made in the different counties.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 20.—The rapid decline in the river has dispelled all fears of further damage to crops, but so great is the diversity of opinion in regard to the injury to the cotton crop in this district that it is impossible to estimate it. The amount varies from twenty thousand to eighty thousand bales, but there is no precedent by which the effect of the overflow on cotton at this season of the year can be approximated. The number of acres of corn ruined by flood is largely in excess of cotton.

NEW YORK, Aug. 21.—Thurlow Weed, his family and servants have been suffering severely with symptoms resembling cholera. The consulting physicians were puzzled by the sudden and strange sickness, which indicated poisoning. It was discovered that a copper tea-kettle, used for boiling water for the coffee, had been scoured with oxalic acid, which, combined with the copper, formed arsenate of copper. The physicians say Weed, his daughter and three servants had a narrow escape.

CHICAGO, Aug. 21.—A correspondent of the Evening Post reports that Mrs. Lincoln is pronounced well enough to leave the asylum and visit her sister, Mrs. Edwards, at Springfield. It is not likely she will return to Bellevue Asylum.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 21.—Lieut. Com. Kells has succeeded in getting the Rio Bravo afloat and carried into Sabine Pass. She is ready for tow to Galveston.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 21.—Gov. Smith was at Sandersville to-day. The excitement over the apprehended insurrection has subsided. Peace and order have been restored.

GALVESTON, Aug. 21.—The official count of the vote on the constitutional convention in 101 counties shows the following result: For the convention, 46,253; against, 25,655.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 23.—The rapid decline of the river has relieved the overflowed cotton above here, and some of the planters whose cotton was in the water say they will make two-thirds of a crop if the season is propitious, and that the damage to the plant is comparatively light.

CHICAGO, Aug. 23.—There was a frost in various points in Illinois on Saturday night. The potatoes and vegetables were severely injured in the vicinity of Freeport.

KEY WEST, Aug. 23.—The yellow fever has entirely disappeared, and Key West is now exceedingly healthy. The weather is cool and pleasant.

FOREIGN.

VIENNA, Aug. 18.—The insurrection in the Turkish provinces covers two hundred miles of territory. It is reported that two thousand five hundred troops, who landed at Kleck, refused to march for Mostar, on account of the insurgents' occupancy of the mountain passes on the route.

The garrison at Trebigne, in Herzegovina, made a sortie yesterday, but were repulsed. The insurgents burned several villages during the engagement.

LONDON, Aug. 18.—The News has a Vienna special that the Bosnia insurrection is spreading. The towns of Berbier, Dubiezsa and Kostalnieza are in flames.

The subscriptions throughout Germany to indemnify the Prussian priests for the withdrawal of State grants amount to $350,000. This amounts to half the sum withdrawn.

RANGOON, Aug. 18.—The River Irrawaddy is over its banks, flooding rice-fields and destroying much property.

VERSAILLES, Aug. 19.—The Republican permanent committee today presented an interpellation to M. Buffet, minister of the interior, concerning the Bonapartist newspaper articles and the prohibition of the sale of Gladstone's pamphlet against Vaticanism. M. Buffet defended the course of the government, and said vigorous measures had been directed against the Bonapartist newspapers. He said he had received no request to authorize the sale of Gladstone's book, but would not authorize the circulation of polemics against the Catholic faith.

LONDON, August 19.—The Times, commenting on the Turkish situation, says: "While we think the success of the rebellion would be a calamity at present, because it might precipitate a disruption of the Ottoman empire and plunge Europe into a mighty war, we cannot blame the people for seeking to throw off their intolerable yoke."

PARIS, Aug. 20.—Le Temps says it has received information confirmatory of Le Nord's article, to the effect that Russia, acting in conjunction with Germany and Austria, intend making an appeal to the powers of Europe in favor of settling the Herzegovinian difficulty by an understanding among all the countries interested, thus averting all danger of a European war.

ROME, August 21.—The Fanfulla says the late Emperor Ferdinand, of Austria, left by his will to the Pope $6,000,000, which amount has already been paid.

SANTANDER, Aug. 22.—It is rumored that serious disturbances have occurred at Estella, and that the arrest and incarceration of Gens. Meudiri and Mogrevejo, and other Carlist officers, was because of their complicity in a plot against Don Carlos.

RAGUSA, Aug. 22.—A number of Montenegrins, who joined the Herzegovinian insurgents, have captured seven small forts around Gasko Duga and Nistki, near the Montenegrin frontier.

GENEVA, Aug. 22.—The National Council has passed resolutions for the suppression of convents and Sisters of Charity.

LONDON, Aug. 23.—A special to the Times from Constantinople says the Porte has accepted the proposition of friendly powers to counsel submission of the insurgents to Turkish authority, and represent to them their utter hopelessness from foreign intervention.

Servia Pacha has been appointed special commissioner to examine into the grievances of the disaffected people. It is confidently expected the insurrection will thus soon terminate.

A special dispatch to the Daily News from Rome says the Pope has invited Archbishop Ledochowski to Rome on the expiration of his term of imprisonment, in February next, to attend a special consistory, at which he will receive the insignia of the cardinalate.

Madrid dispatches report that the Alfonsists at Seo de Urgel have severed the communication between the citadel and an outlying fort which defends it, and have cut the aqueduct which furnished the besieged with their principal supply of water.

TO SUPERINTENDENTS OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren: For some time I have been thinking of addressing you on this important subject, viz.: A council of the superintendents of the Mississippi Conference, to be held this fall at some central place, and to be made a permanent organization, meeting annually.

You all can see in an instant the reason for this organization: To promote the general interests of this great work for the Master; to interchange opinions and plans for best conducting Sunday schools; to build up good plans, and work up to them. The Sunday school is second to no work in his kingdom, and why not do all that is possible for the good of the cause? There is much to be done. Now let us come together and do it.

All who favor this plan and will attend will please notify me immediately, naming the place of your choice for holding the first session.

Fraternally yours,

B. H. CATCHING.

HAZLEHURST, Copiah County, Miss.

WHAT an honor to assist the Almighty! God's part in the work, however, is the chief thing. If he leaves the field—the human heart—waste, it lies eternally waste.—Heubner.

THE GENERAL MINUTES.

We have had no little trouble in procuring returns from the Annual Conferences to make up the General Minutes. We have taken great pains to secure correctness—writing letters to procure statistics, adding up, correcting and verifying all the figures, so that they may be depended upon as far as the returns are trustworthy. We are sorry to say that some of the reports are imperfect—e. g., those of baptisms, especially of infants. We hope our pastors will pay more attention to this subject, and report not only all they baptize themselves, but all who are baptized by others within the bounds of their respective pastoral charges. There were moneys contributed to the cause of missions which passed into the treasury besides what went through the Annual Conferences, which are not reported in the General Minutes. We must put forth greater efforts in the cause of missions. The delay in issuing the minutes has been beyond the editor's control. We hope all our friends—especially all our ministers—will procure copies of this highly suggestive annual. We thank God most devoutly for the gratifying increase in the ranks of the ministry and membership of the church. We append

The transferred preachers are reckoned with those of the Conferences to which they now belong. The preachers who were discontinued this year (61,) and those who were located (88,) are not counted; those who were admitted on trial (260) and those who were readmitted (34,) are counted among the travelling preachers, though many of them are also reckoned with the local preachers. The colored members, for the most part, have left our connection for the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, organized by our Bishops under the authority of the General Conference. They are reported in their own minutes; hence the apparent decrease in that department.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

From the Work.

OZARK CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: On this circuit we are in the midst of protracted meetings. Thus far we have had encouraging success. The Lord has manifested himself to many in saving power and goodness.

We began at Pleasant Hill on the third Sabbath in July, and closed on Wednesday night following. After Sunday the congregations were moderate in size in the day, but good at night. Many persons were at the altar for prayer. The church was revived and four members added upon profession. We were assisted at this meeting by Bro. Elisha Phillips and the venerable Zaccheus Dowling.

The meeting was commenced at Tabernacle on Saturday before the fourth Sabbath, and closed on Thursday night after. The congregations were large from the first to the last; in fact at night the congregations were immense. The church was considerably revived, many souls professed conversion, and seventeen were received into membership. This meeting was commenced by Bro. Travis Z. Hildreth. Bros. Henry Metcalf and Van Marshall assisted.

At Post Oak we began on Saturday before the first Sabbath in August, and closed on Thursday night after. The congregations were of good size. Some professed conversion and three joined the church. The church was considerably encouraged and refreshed. This meeting was commenced by Bro. Elisha Philips, Zinnamon Dowling and Bro. Metcalf aiding.

On Saturday night before the second Sabbath we began at Wesley chapel, and closed on Wednesday night. During the time our congregations were somewhat interrupted by showers of rain. Nevertheless, the attendance was good, and the church was more powerfully blessed than I have seen before for three years. There were three accessions. In this meeting I was helped by the Rev. Zaccheus Dowling and Rev. Travis Z. Hildreth.

During these four meetings we have received twenty-seven members into the church, six of whom came to us from the Missionary Baptist Church. Up to this date, on this circuit, forty-eight have been added to the church, and we have lost fourteen by dismissal, expulsion and otherwise, leaving a total net increase of thirty-four. The circuit now numbers seven hundred and eighty-eight members. Of these sixty will pray in the public congregations; and that is one out of every thirteen. ANGUS DOWLING.

WALNUT GROVE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our third quarterly meeting for this circuit commenced at Walnut Grove church on Friday night before the first Sabbath in August, and continued until the second Sunday at ten o'clock P. M., resulting in thirty-seven accessions to our church—thirty-six by Discipline and one by letter—and two or three to the Missionary Baptist Church, and eighteen or twenty conversions, perhaps more. We could not ascertain the exact number. The church was greatly edified. We had with us, from the commencement of the meeting until the following Thursday morning, Bro. W. B. Hines, presiding elder, and Bro. J. W. Atkisson, president of East Mississippi Female College; also Bro. J. D. Hays, of Morton, during the entire meeting. We are looking for still greater displays of God's convicting, converting and sanctifying power. O for a general pentecostal dispensation of the divine Spirit! R. A. SIDLEY, Pastor.

Plaquemine Brulee Camp Meeting.

MR. EDITOR: Please say to the readers of the ADVOCATE, and to all especially interested in the Plaquemine Brulee camp meeting, to begin on the ninth of September proximo, that the large and commodious camp shed, alluded to in a former communication, has been completed, and reflects great credit upon the brethren who so nobly came forward and furnished the means and labor necessary for its erection. It is furnished with a well-arranged pulpit and altar, with comfortable seats sufficient to accommodate six hundred people, and, if necessary, arrangements can be easily made to accommodate two hundred more.

The following brethren: Jesse B. Clark, Dr. R. R. Lyons, Gabriel Lyons, James Blackwell and Arsamus Hayes, constitute the board of managers, from any one of whom information may be obtained by persons arriving on the ground in regard to board for themselves or forage for their horses. In accordance with our plan, we hear of many coming prepared to pitch their own tents and make themselves comfortable during the meeting. Such persons will have suitable grounds assigned them by the board of managers.

While we look for some ministers from abroad, we confidently expect the ministers from the Opelousas district, local and itinerant, to be present in full force. The church in this section is looking forward to this camp meeting with great interest, and is praying daily for its success. "All things are now ready." Come, brethren, armed for the fight with the whole panoply of God, that the "Lord may add unto his church daily such as shall be saved."

Flood in the Ohio.

At the time we go to press (Thursday morning, August 5,) says the Central Methodist, Catlettsburg, Ky., August 10, the Ohio river is higher than it has been since 1864, and within a few inches of that memorable freshet. The town of Catlettsburg occupies pretty high banks, but a large part of it is overflowed, and many families have been compelled to move. Our office is upon a slight elevation, but as we write the water is within a few inches of the doorstep, entirely submerging our vegetable garden, and cutting us off both from the turnpike and the town. The vast sea of water which lies before us is absolutely appalling to look upon, while the evidences of destruction, such as wrecked boats, fragments of houses, bridges, mills, lumber, stacks of hay, etc., render the scene fearful in the extreme. It would be impossible to estimate the loss, since every community has suffered more or less, but the principal item is the loss of crops by the overflow, which embraces thousands of acres, not only of the Ohio river bottoms, but upon streams emptying into the Ohio. About daylight this morning the highest point was reached, and at this hour (eleven o'clock) it has fallen about one inch.

The rainfall for the past month or more has been unparalleled, and has resulted, to say nothing of the present freshet, in the loss of nearly the entire wheat and oats crop in the Ohio valley, while the grass is uncut and is virtually a loss, since the weeds almost hide it from sight. Add to this the present destruction, and it will require a fruitful imagination to picture the suffering which must ensue.

NEW ORLEANS PACIFIC RAILWAY. We are indebted to Mr. Wheelock, says the Picayune of August 21, for the following memoranda, in which is announced the awarding of a contract to Maj. S. L. James for grading and clearing the entire line of the projected New Orleans Pacific Railway between Alexandria, Rapides parish, and Mansfield, in the parish of DeSoto. The memoranda also contains other data of interest connected with this important work.

MEMORANDA.

Contract awarded to Maj. S. L. James for grading and clearing the entire line of road from Alexandria, in Rapides, to Mansfield, in DeSoto parish. The grading and clearing from the latter town to the State line of Texas left to the option of the company, when they shall have decided finally on the terminus. Subscribers to the capital stock in the parishes of Rapides, Natchitoches and DeSoto to have the option of paying their subscriptions in cash or labor on the same terms and stipulations as agreed to by the contractor, Maj. James. Three hundred men will leave this city on Saturday morning, with a full equipment of tools, provisions, etc., to be followed by two hundred and fifty more within the next fifteen days. The company have the right to increase the number of hands to one thousand men, and the same will be done provided the friends of the enterprise in this city and the above-named parishes respond with the alacrity confidently expected from them. Acts of agreement signed and duly recorded before J. G. Eustis, Esq., notary public. Sealed proposals for cross-ties, in accordance with former specifications, will be received up to September 1, at the company's office.

Alexandria District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The sixth annual session of the Alexandria District Conference convened at Columbia, La., on the twelfth of August. Our beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. H. Stone, was absent on account of sickness, whereupon Rev. C. R. Godfrey was elected president of the Conference. The writer was elected secretary, and H. C. Walker assistant secretary. There were thirteen preachers and twenty delegates present.

The inquiry into the spiritual condition of the church was thorough, and it affords me great pleasure to state that the district is aglow with the spirit of saving souls. There have been revival meetings in almost every circuit, as will be shown by the fact that 235 precious souls have been added to the church, and about as many have found that peace with God which passeth all understanding. We have now in our district 1,733 members of the church, and we feel encouraged that so large a number of our members are awakening to a deep sense of their duty, and are coming forward to the assistance of our pastors. The stewards of the various churches have assessed $4,575 for the support of the ministry, of which amount $971 has been collected. Our church property was appraised at $14,100.

The report of the temperance committee was quite favorable. The church is now temperate and sober. There are 907 members belonging to the various temperance organizations in our district. Our preachers and laymen have greatly encouraged their organization, and are witnessing its happy effects in the community.

The vital question of Sunday schools was by no means neglected. We have 20 Sabbath schools, attended by 530 children and 72 officers. There are 1,200 volumes in our libraries, and 75 periodicals taken.

The CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is taken by many of our members. Our hearts are cheered weekly by perusing the valuable information contained in your paper. We trust that every head of our Methodist families will take the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

A resolution was passed establishing an annual district camp ground at the Castor Sulphur Springs. Our next District Conference will be held at that place.

This synoptical report will suffice to show what official business was transacted, but by no means formed the most attractive feature of our Conference. Our beloved Bros. Trippett, of Monroe, and White and Borden, of Trenton, were in attendance, and preached and worked with wonderful power and effect, for which work our entire community thank them and love them, and God will richly reward them.

There has never been a time within the recollection of the oldest members when the church was so wonderfully revived. Truly, God was with us and dwelt among us.

It seems that ministers and laymen all came to this Conference deeply and solemnly impressed with the necessity of holiness of heart. All desired truly to feel that the blood of Jesus cleanseth us from all sin—to be wholly sanctified unto the Lord. This was truly and emphatically the attractive feature of our Conference, and we have great reason to thank God, and do praise his great and holy name, that twelve additional members of the church, including four ministers, can now testify that the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin, that they are fully saved and entirely sanctified, and that they obtained that blessing at the Alexandria District Conference. After a most wonderful revival in the church, and the existence of a happy, fraternal feeling among the brethren, shared alike by those who did not join our happy band, our ministers and laymen took their departure on the sixteenth, more fully determined than ever to push forward the great work of the Master, and particularly to preach and talk more on the all-important subject of holiness of heart or entire sanctification.

One could not expect to attend many such meetings as we have had in a life-time. We hope and do believe that God will wonderfully bless the Alexandria district this year.

JUSTIFYING FAITH.

A HYMN, affectionately and respectfully dedicated to my good Christian wife, Mrs. SUSAN LEWIS SAMFORD, whose prayers and patience have been worth more to me than all the treasures of earth.

BY WM. FLEWELLEN SAMFORD, A. M., LL. D.

Lord, at thy feet I humbly lie,
For justifying faith I pray:
Look on me with a pitying eye,
And smile these clouds of doubt away.

My Savior's robe to touch help me,
That I may gladly rise and sing,
Like blind Bartimeus: Let me see
Destroy of sin the mortal sting.

"Canst thou believe?" Lord, I believe;
Help thou my trembling unbelief,
May I no more thy mercy grieve;
Give me the faith thou gav'st the thief!

O Rock of Ages, cover me;
When storms beat on my darken'd way,
When sinking in the roaring sea,
Let me, like fearful Peter, pray!

With loving trust my soul I give
Into thy outstretch'd, bleeding hands;
I die with thee, that I may live,
And rise to join seraphic bands.

THE HILLS, near Auburn, Ala., Aug. 2, 1875.

The Appearance of Evil.

Experience proves the timeliness of Paul's exhortation. It is relatively an easy matter to abstain from gross sins. The temptation does not lie here so much as in lesser evils. The trial of faith is a necessary condition to its existence. Here are its resources of strength, and the secret of its development. When temptation comes not in the higher forms of evil it will in the lower. When it is not sin itself, it is the "appearance" of sin. And this, as intimated, not so much that the man may fall as that he may be blessed. It is the nature of evil to overthrow or be overthrown. It is full of cunning—no less abundant in resources. From hideousness it changes to inviting beauty. If entrance is denied in one guise, it assumes another. The attack is made at unexpected times and in unexpected places.

In the apostle's charge the beginning-point is guarded. The greater is comprehended in the lesser. It supposes a very tender and sensitive conscience. It implies great moral strength and watchfulness. It contemplates a state where the danger is not in evil so much as in its appearance. It is not the substance, but the shadow. It is not the thing itself, but the semblance. He supposes that the Christian, as he must if he remain a Christian, abstains from evil, but needs caution against its appearance. Videttes are thrown forward of the picket guard to give warning of the first appearance of the enemy. At every possible approach this double caution is to be observed. Here is the beginning of danger. No man becomes an abandoned sinner by one act. It requires effort. Repetition hardens. Smaller offenses, like an entering wedge, open the way for larger ones. His fall from virtue began perhaps in what is never harshly condemned. Yet even from these he drew back. His conscience was yet tender. It had the flesh of the infant. In imagination the sorrowful eyes of a dead mother look into his. But evil has entered in. The leaven works. Muscle is developed and sinews toughen. So it fails out after awhile, as if the way had been oiled; he walks boldly and strongly in the road of death. With hardened, unblushing front he faces the world. As in the one case, so in the other. No Christian falls away by one overt act. The beginning of his fall is in the smallest possible things—for lack of watchfulness, unobservable even to himself. It is not in commission so much as in sins of omission. It is not in evil so much as in the appearance of evil. First the faithful vidette and then the picket guard is withdrawn. The enemy makes an easy but cautious approach. Though far inferior in strength, resources and position, he enters in and takes possession. The man falls.

But so faintly sometimes are the lines drawn, who can tell where innocence ends and guilt begins? Who can discern always even the appearance of evil? To ask the question itself implies an alarming state of weakness. With the will to know God's mind and God's ways comes this knowledge. No man has time to stop to debate the question. A state of controversy is a state of danger. It is not whether the moving, shadowy mists on the mountain sides are approaching enemies or not, but it is to be ready to repulse them if they should be. The very question, "Is there the appearance of evil in this?" answers itself. If the conscience is in the least alarmed, it is enough. If, though, the shadowy outlines be not enemies in fact, they are doubtless enemies to it. They are to be avoided. The thing that cannot be done with a clear conscience is not to be done at all. The conscience, educated up to the point contemplated by Paul, will always give the alarm. It is never uncertain.

But the application grows stronger, if possible. Man is not only to act for himself, but for others. In his is involved the life of his neighbor. As a live branch his fruit is to furnish food to those around him. His candle is to give light to all that are in the house. He is not to consider his own good only, but the good of his fellow. So, though to him there be no appearance of evil, yet, if to others, he is to abstain. He may, with a good conscience, eat. He may go to this place or that. He may indulge in this or that thing. But the apostle's rule holds as good in ours as in his day: "If meat make my brother to offend, I will eat no flesh while the world standeth." Again: "But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat, now walkest thou not charitably. Destroy not him with thy meat for whom Christ died." Regard for the conscience of another is a living law of the gospel. No man can be in harmony with God who puts a stumbling block in the way of men. The fate of the fig-tree is a lively warning. We cannot be both barren and safe. The Christian must feed others, at the same time he feeds himself. How is he doing this when taking diversions or indulging in pleasures that have, if no more, the appearance of evil? that have, if not to himself, the appearance of evil to his brother? And what must we say to those who not only do not shun the appearance, but indulge in evil itself? Of what good is professions, prayers, songs and service to such? Prophesying and casting out devils in the name of Jesus is not enough. Fasts and mourns, and sighs and tears never saved a sinner. They will serve to abundantly condemn the professed Christian. What! A Christian and covetous? A Christian and unclean? A Christian and full of lusts? A Christian and a robber, not of man alone, but of God? Be astonished, O man, at your own hardness, lifting up a smiling face upon the world around you, with a heart full of these things.

D. T. J.

A Sabbath at Camp Meeting.

The sounding of the horn broke the stillness of the air, and shortly after could be seen coming from the numerous little buildings that are scattered among the trees, people who were passing into the preaching tent for morning prayer. It was an hour which sent its hallowing influence throughout the entire day; for, while the sun was drawing up the dew that sparkled on grass and branch, God extracted praise and prayer from hearts that waited there before him; and the voices floated out, freighted with thanksgiving for mercies that were ever new as the morning which breathed around us with its clear beauty and fresh coolness.

After breakfast the horn blew again for service, and we reassembled to hear the word. After the prayer and hymn the minister arose and held forth before us two types of humanity—the Pharisee and the publican. He gave us sound doctrine and solid truth, which were so well and faithfully rendered that when he ended there were few of us who did not feel that our hearts stood divested of all earthly consideration and self-merit, crying out in the deepness of contrition: "God, be merciful to me a sinner."

Yet, as the experience meeting, which immediately followed, showed, true faith in Christ was there. Varied as the experiences were, they all had flowing through them the most comfortable fact: "Yet Jesus died for me." And the Master himself was there. We "felt his presence, as a spell of might, stoop o'er us from above." I looked out through the soft greenness of the pine branches that shaded the glare of the sun on the lake to the boundary where earth and sky seemed to greet each other, and from whence the waves came leaping and shining, as it were, with the glory of the greeting, and I felt that there was no need to look so far to find heaven touching earth, for they were meeting just around us. We moved and breathed in the love of Christ, and hearts shone with the glory of the air.

After a short interval the eleven o'clock service began. I never shall forget that hour! I had thought that my heart was full of the feast that the Lord gave us in the preceding part of the day; but I had yet to learn how much of peace and joy the human soul can bear. The text for the sermon consisted of the verses beginning with the clause, "Our conversation is in heaven," and the grand exposition which followed indeed lifted us up into heavenly places with Christ Jesus. Mind and soul followed the speaker, quivering with expectation as he unveiled the benefits and wondrous privileges of our citizenship in heaven; and when he told of the change our vile bodies will undergo in order to become like that of our blessed Lord, there flowed in upon the soul a peace so intense that it was almost pain. Well might it be so, for could it not almost catch sight of "the King in his beauty," and hear the rustling of his garments? What must the reality be when it has not entered into the heart of man to conceive of the things prepared for those who love God? And yet such thoughts as we heard expressed can proceed from a human mind. "O the ineffable forever!" my heart would cry as it drank in the fullness, only to find it a taste of the glory that is to come.

Three o'clock came and the immense tent was crowded, for many had come during the morning from the city and the surrounding country places. This hour we spent up in the mount, and with Peter and James and John beheld the transfiguration. With gratitude, mingled with pain, we gazed and pondered, for in the brightness of the vision could be seen the shadow of the cross and cup that were to be the lot of "him who loved us and gave himself for us."

The interval between this and the night service sped away in kindly greeting and sweet converse with friends and dear ones; and, when night came, with undiminished interest the people assembled once more. This sermon was especially directed to those who had not yet obeyed the voice of the Good Shepherd. The preacher's voice rang out with the pathos and intense earnestness of a messenger from God who was struggling against the powers of darkness for the recovery of souls. "Choose life, that ye may live;" and numbers chose it, for conviction pierced many hearts that hitherto had been shielded by indifference and unbelief. They sought that everlasting life, and found it as all who seek do find it—at the foot of the cross.

That blessed day! To me it was a most perfect whole. It began with thanksgiving, from that merged into confession, thence into sweet communion with Christ, and closed in work for him; and at last the dying pine fires threw long, flickering gleams over the dark ground, the lake lay quiet, the stars shone out soft and clear, while we lay down to rest under the shadow of God's wing.

GOODWYN.

Objectionable Customs at Protracted Meetings.

MR. EDITOR: As the summer and fall are seasons during which many protracted meetings are held; it may not be inopportune to make some remarks concerning the observance at these meetings of customs which are thought to exert a deleterious influence upon many persons, and some of which prove a great inconvenience physically.

One of these customs is the making of a variety of propositions which are objectionable on account of their number, or on account of the nature of the propositions themselves. You may have heard the minister conducting the exercises at a protracted meeting request all who believe they are Christians to kneel at the altar or at their seats, then ask backsliders to do the same, then call on those who desire to be Christians to do the same, and finally ask all who want to go to heaven to give evidence of such desire by kneeling.

Now this multiplicity of propositions places some persons in a very delicate position, confuses others, and brings pain to the feelings of some peculiarly conscientious persons. Those who believe they are Christians, at least many of them, do not like to express this good opinion of themselves before a public assembly; not because they are ashamed of their religion or their Savior, but because they feel a delicacy in making this statement of belief about themselves. Others, who are at a loss to determine their religious state, do not know with which class to kneel, and in their confusion may express a wrong judgment with regard to themselves, possibly to their detriment or that of some of their acquaintances. Then persons of very sensitive consciences, who think they must respond to some proposition of the preacher, and fear divine displeasure if they do not, are pained by apprehension that they may not place themselves in the right category, and bow, dreading remorse if they afterward conclude that they have made a mistake. Persons who object to these propositions must, nevertheless, answer to some of them, sit still and take no part in the exercises, or leave the place of worship. Either of these last causes would probably subject the persons to criticism, possibly by the minister himself. Thus people are placed in positions which compel them to choose between unpleasant and, it is believed, unwarranted alternatives.

One of the propositions already mentioned is objectionable from its very nature, and that is the calling on persons who desire to go to heaven to come to the altar or kneel at their seats. Now, as the writer has heard it asked, what man in his senses does not want to go to heaven? And we may also ask: If the object of these calls is to single out from the congregation those who are really concerned about the salvation of their souls, why make an appeal to which the whole congregation can respond? It has occurred that, when some did not kneel in compliance with this request, the minister has made remarks about them as persons who did not desire to go to heaven. In opposition to this procedure the writer not long ago heard a man, who had recently attended a meeting where this occurred, argue that if the minister meant to ask those who had a vague, general desire to go to heaven, to come to the altar, all could have gone; but if he meant to invite only those who were actually concerned about their spiritual welfare, he (the speaker) would have been a hypocrite to have gone when he did not feel particular anxiety about his condition. He further argued that if he had really been a seeker of religion he was not bound to respond to this call; so that, view the matter in any light, the minister should not have talked thus about those who did not go to the altar. The minister alluded to is a member of another branch of the Methodist Church, but the same course has doubtless been pursued by ministers of the church of which you and the writer are members.

Besides making these varied propositions, there is the custom, sometimes observed, of keeping penitents kneeling at the altar so long that this posture necessarily becomes painful to them. While the rest of the congregation are afforded relief by alternately sitting and kneeling, the penitents are kept kneeling probably during the offering of two prayers and the singing of one or two hymns. It certainly appears that sitting during a portion of the time would make the penitents far more comfortable, and the writer would not like to believe that any rational man entertained the opinion that protracted kneeling is necessary to procure a blessing from Heaven. Protracted prayer can do this, but a painful posture is not required.

The length to which services are often carried at protracted meetings also seems to hinder the good effects of the meetings. Neither penitents nor other members of the congregation should be wearied, since, if for no other reason, physical weariness exerts an unfavorable influence on the spirit.

Mr. Editor, your correspondent professed religion at a protracted meeting, and he now looks back to one day of that meeting as the date of his conversion. He favors meetings of this kind—how could he do otherwise?—but he does not favor excess of excitement, services or propositions; nor does he find that the doctrines or Discipline of his church approve these things to which he objects. He does not think it well to resort to strategic appeals or shrewd manipulation in order to induce people to engage in the exercises of these meetings. Let the truth be proclaimed in its simplicity and with earnestness, then let a plain proposition be made to all who desire the prayers of ministers and others, and the duty of the preacher is discharged as far as propositions are concerned. Protracted meetings are means of great good, and should be conducted wisely and cautiously.

METHODIST.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. SARAH A. H. PETTIT was born in Somerset county, eastern shore of Maryland, April 2, 1810, and died at the home of her son-in-law, S. W. Riley, in Morehouse parish, La., April 18, 1875, aged sixty-five years and ten days.

Sister Pettit was the daughter of Matthew and Elizabeth Armstrong, with whom she resided and by whom she was trained to love and serve God until the year 1828, when she was married to Mr. Augustin Stevens, of Virginia. Mr. Stevens, after his marriage, moved to Beaver, Pa., where they resided for thirteen years; then moved to Ohio, where they resided for four years. In 1847 they moved to Morehouse parish, La. In 1849 Mr. Stevens died, leaving to the care of his surviving wife seven children, with but a small estate for their maintenance. She trained these children and managed this estate so that they were respectably educated and provided for. Matthew, Lula, Elizabeth, Christopher and Alfred have passed over the river of death. James H. and Anna still remain, abiding the time appointed of the good Lord. It is not known precisely at what time Sister Pettit was converted or joined the church, but she was a member at the time of her marriage with Mr. Stevens.

In 1856 she married Mr. James Pettit, with whom she lived for some five or six years, faithfully and impartially performing the duties of wife, mother and stepmother. Mr. Pettit died early after the beginning of the late war, leaving in her charge a plantation and servants, together with two children of his by a former marriage. It is said of her that under these trying circumstances she did the best she could—always, when erring at all, erring on the lenient side.

Sister Pettit's religious life did not so much appear in her utterances or professions as in her acts. She delighted in the services of the sanctuary, had pleasure in the company of the saints, and readily conversed on religious subjects. But her religious character was more clearly exhibited in her acts of kindness, especially to the sick. One has said of her: "She was always doing something for some one." She delighted in doing good, and had but to know that there was sickness to insure her presence and kind offices. She was exceedingly cautious in the management of her affairs, and was always careful that her secular and her religious life should correspond. And while she was "diligent in business, she was fervent in spirit, serving the Lord;" hence when death came it found her in readiness. She had set her house in order more than two years before she was called to go hence. She had laid aside as sacred treasure an amount sufficient to defray her funeral expenses, prepared her burial suit, arranged her temporal affairs, and placed herself in readiness to respond to the call of death whenever it should be made.

She was unconscious for some three days; consequently she said nothing during her last illness encouraging the hopes of her family and friends. Indeed no dying utterances were required. Her life of pious labor, sacrifice and devotion abundantly satisfied all who knew her that she has entered into the rest that remaineth to the people of God.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT TO REV. CHAS. F. BRITTON.

At the second Quarterly Conference of the Greenwood circuit, Marianna district, Alabama Conference, a committee was appointed, consisting of A. R. Godwin, A. Hays and William H. Logan, to prepare a suitable tribute of respect to the memory of the Rev. Charles F. Britton, a member of this Conference, who departed this life March 30, 1875. The committee submit the following report:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove from this world the soul of our deceased brother, Charles F. Britton; therefore,

Resolved, That while we deeply deplore his loss, we nevertheless humbly submit to that dispensation of an all-wise Providence which in the death of our brother has deprived the church of one of its most useful ministers, our Quarterly Conference of one of its most aged and efficient members, the community of one of its most worthy citizens, the cause of religion an able advocate, and the world of a good man.

In paying this tribute, a brief sketch of the life of one so intimately connected with the history of Methodism in the counties of Jackson, Washington and Calhoun, Fla., can scarcely be considered superfluous.

Charles Fletcher Britton was born in Marlboro district, S. C., January 1, 1808, and attached himself to the Methodist Church in 1833. A few months afterward he was appointed class-leader and superintendent of the Sunday school, and ere the close of the year was licensed to exhort. Desirous of extending his usefulness beyond the limited sphere of an exhorter, in 1834 he applied for and received license to preach. From that time to the close of his life he endeavored to follow the injunction of Paul to Timothy, to be "instant in season and out of season." When Bro. Britton was licensed to preach but few local or traveling preachers were to be found in the section above named, and in which he established himself; consequently his labors were diffused throughout a large extent of territory. To his persistent efforts and indefatigable zeal the church is indebted for the organization and erection of many of those churches in west Florida which yet stand as monuments of his devotion to the cause of Christ.

As an evidence of his earnestness in his calling, Bro. Britton, in the early part of his ministry, frequently traveled many weary miles on foot, often walking twenty miles and preaching twice during the same day, that the poor might have the word of God brought, as it were, to their very door-steps.

As a minister Bro. Britton was not what at the present day would be called a "fine preacher." His sermons were plain, practical and directly to the point; and remarkable for their originality. His style was nervous, his delivery earnest and impressive. He was a most successful revivalist, rarely holding a protracted meeting in which his efforts were not crowned with success.

As a man he was warm in his friendships, sincere in his attachments, prompt in meeting his engagements, and a devoted father and husband.

It would be extremely difficult to designate the most distinguishing feature of his piety. If any one feature deserved more prominent attention than another, we would say that it was his faith in prayer—his life of prayer. None were more constant in private, nor more fervid nor singularly happy in their public devotions.

But why say more? Brief and imperfect as this sketch may be, it will suffice to show that a "prince in Israel" has fallen—a good man has gone to his reward.

Friends, relatives and co-laborers: "He is not with us, he is gone." Let us not mourn his departure, but strive, in the great battle of life, to keep his example before us, that at the close of our lives we may be equally triumphant.

AT A special meeting of the choir of the Methodist church, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Miss IRA C. BRADFIELD, our leader, the following resolutions, offered by T. G. Fowler, were adopted:

Whereas, In the dispensation of an all-wise Providence, which has taken from us our tenderly beloved and cherished leader, Ira C. Bradfield, in the perfection of early womanhood and in the midst of her great usefulness; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in this saddest of earthly bereavements we recognize and bow beneath the hand of our Father in heaven, who, though he destroy us, yet will we love and honor him.

Resolved, That we will ever cherish the memory and strive to imitate the rare virtues which adorned the Christian life of her whose memory we have met to commemorate.

Resolved, That while we can never cease to regret the loss of the angel friend from our side, and know that the vacant chair cannot be filled by her equal, yet we will dwell on her lovely character, endeavor to imitate her Christian virtues, will remember her gentle precepts, and be guided by the laws of kindness which ever dwelt in her heart and on her lips. Though she is at rest, and a dark shadow rests on her home and on the hearts of her friends, yet let us remember that the cloud which rest it wears a silver lining, for the pure soul which has left the earthly casket now basks in the sunshine of eternal bliss.

WILLIAM A. MIMS died at his residence in Lauderdale county, Miss., July 18, 1875. Bro. Mims was born December 8, 1817. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in his twelfth year, in which he lived a consistent and useful member until his death. He was a class-leader of the church at the time of his death. Bro. Mims was one of the excellent of the earth—a man of solid parts, deep piety and unbending integrity. Of him it can be truthfully said: "The world was richer by his life and poorer by his death." In all the walks of life he was most exemplary. As a citizen, neighbor, husband and parent he was most worthy of imitation. It was my privilege to visit his sick-chamber frequently, and found him fully resigned to God's will. Bro. Mims leaves a wife, two daughters and one son, all grown. May God comfort their hearts and bring them all to heaven at last.

T. Y. ARMSTRONG.

DIED, in Amite county, Miss., WILLIAM JASPER, son of A. J. and C. Roberts. He was born June 13, 1861, and died August 4, 1875. He was one of the best of boys, industrious in all things. He had worked hard on the farm until the crop was made, and had been going to school for some time. On Thursday before he died he took a fever at school. On Friday he went again, and it was his last day at school. He went home and took his bed to rise no more. It seems hard for us to realize the fact that Willie is gone, never more to meet us in the Sabbath school, nor take part in our Bible class. We trust he has gone to join that throng above, where the bright angels will teach him more perfectly to sing praises to God.

JAS. D. ROBERTS.

JULIA MCCARTY, oldest child of Charles and Emma McCarty, died of congestive chill, at her father's residence in Pearlington, Miss., July 31, 1875, aged nine years, seven months and eleven days.

Whereas, It has pleased God, in his all-wise providence, to remove from our midst little Julia; And whereas, This Sunday school has lost a faithful and attentive scholar; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved scholar we, the Pearlington Sunday school, have sustained a loss which we sorrowfully deplore, yet from the teachings of his holy word we humbly submit ourselves to his divine will, feeling fully assured that he doeth all things well.

DREAM-TIME.

BY JULIET C. MARSH.

Under us, over us, everywhere,
Sweets of summer, from drifted bloom
To lifted skies, with plenty of room
For clouds to sail through idle air,
And float the day out into the gloom.

Song and chatter and coo of dove,
Through all the hours of a listless day
That dawned for dreaming. And who can say
If giving or taking is best of love,
Or feeling a rapture either way?

Shy, soft shadows, and wonderful lights,
That catch up colors, and burn to shame
The cheeks of roses. A long day's game,
That somehow ends when the great, grave nights
With dews and glooms put out the flame.

Roomy blossoms, and swinging bells,
That move to the weight of swaying bees,
Drowsy singing in many keys
From peopled grasses, the fuller swells
Caught up and echoed among the trees.

Blissful languor and perfect rest;
Waste of summer in pleasant ways,
Idle passing of empty days,
That dream their way out into the West,
In soft half-colors and tender grays.

Christian at Work.

The Great Work for Laymen.

BY ELIHU BURRITT.

It is high time that the Christian community in our larger and smaller cities and towns should face certain facts which the progress of our modern civilization has rendered inevitable as well as evident. It is doubtful if the great religious public has as yet opened its eyes to these momentous facts. The first that should appeal to their most thoughtful consideration is the fact that in New England even, perhaps the most religious community in America, there is not a town or city containing from ten thousand to one hundred thousand inhabitants that has roomage in all its churches for half of its population, even if every pew and aisle were packed full to the last square foot of space. Thus full half the population of such a town are shut out of the house of God for lack of room in it for them. If any reader be inclined to doubt the correctness of this statement, let him take the census of his town against the roomage of all its churches of all denominations.

Here, then, is the front fact in the religious condition of New England, and it must be equally true and evident in all other sections of the country. This is only one of the triple bars of brass across the doors of God's house that close them against half the population of every large town. Religious worship in our costly and elegant churches has become one of the most highly-taxed luxuries of a highly-civilized society—a luxury which only well-to-do people can enjoy. See the universal process by which such worship becomes

TOO COSTLY FOR EVEN THE INDUSTRIOUS POOR.

We will not take a church on the Fifth avenue, in New York, but one just built in a growing and ambitious little city in New England. It has cost perhaps $100,000, half of which lies upon the building as a debt secured by mortgage. It will seat perhaps a thousand persons if it has galleries, or eight hundred if it has not; and as galleries are old-fashioned and "played out," most likely they are left out of the plan and purpose of the sacred structure. Everything must be in harmony with its graceful proportions and external show, such as costly and elegant upholstery, fresco work, a pulpit that would have built a country church a century ago, an organ, a salaried quartette, communion service rivaling that of Solomon's Temple, and all other fashionable elegancies of a fashionable church. Now, then, what next to make it a success—last, but not least, we will not say as an investment of capital, but as a self-supporting establishment? Everybody knows what next—a minister of high order of talent and genius, who shall feel that in taking such a pulpit, Atlas-like, he is taking the grand edifice, with all its cost and all its owes, upon his shoulders. He must tax all the resources of his learning, talent, genius and physical ability, and concentrate them all in one continuous drawing force to fill the church, especially with the most intelligent and well-to-do people of the town, who can pay as well as appreciate his power. The value and demand of the pews depend on his sermons, and the more original and brilliant these become the higher rises the value and cost of every seat. When the church under such talented and devoted ministry culminates in the hoped-for success, the cheapest pew in the building will cost the journeyman mechanic and his family, by the year, as much as the rent of a comfortable house and garden before the greenback era. He cannot feed and clothe his family, and rent two houses at the same time.

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP IN THE GRAND SANCTUARY

is too costly for him. It was not intended or provided for him and his like. He cannot afford to pay for it; he is too proud, and, we might add, too manly, to take his family into a free or charity seat, even if the church felt able or willing to provide one for him. All the churches in New England, fifty years ago, had each a negro pew. Perhaps many of them of modern structure have each two or three what poor men of a manly spirit regard as poverty pews; but such men are not likely to occupy them.

This is brass-bar number two. The third is equally strong, though it may seem smaller and weaker. It may be called the clothes-bar. To make the symmetries and harmonies of a costly and elegant church complete, its worshipers—I beg pardon, the people who worship in it—are not only expected but constrained, by a custom they dare not disobey, to dress on the ascending level of the fashion. To do this, under the present tariff on silks and other fashionable goods, costs an anxiety of mind and a desperation of effort to thousands which it has seldom entered into the hearts of the rich or well-to-do to conceive. I fear it may be said with truth that if all the thoughts by night and day that exercise a modern congregation in regard to dress in church were put in one volume of solicitude, it would outmeasure in width and depth the current of their thoughts in regard to the dress they shall wear or lack among the spirits of the just made perfect in heaven. This clothes difficulty is a bar which in itself shuts out thousands from the house of God, who will not enter it wearing the badge of an inferior social position. There is no country in the world where this bar closes the regular church against such a large proportion of the people as in America, even among our most religious communities. I never was so much impressed by this fact as when asking the wife of an industrious mechanic why she and her husband did not attend some regular place of worship, so that, if sickness or affliction come upon them, their condition would be known and alleviated by the aid and sympathy of Christian people. "That is all very well," she replied, "but the like of us cannot afford to go to church ourselves. Why, it is all we can possibly do to dress our girl even with her classmates in Sunday school."

I would ask the thoughtful reader of any town of ten thousand or more inhabitants if these are not evident facts? If they are, then do they not prove that at least half the population of every such town are shut out of the house of God; that the pulpit ministry does not reach them, and never will reach them, in our modern churches? It is utterly impossible for the regular ministry, under the present exactions and burdens put upon them, to bring these outside masses under their preaching. This is a work for laymen. This is the broad field for Christian labor which they alone can occupy. The earnest, unprofessional preaching of common men, in common buildings, where the pew difficulty, the clothes difficulty and the social difficulty shall be unseen and unfelt, is the only ministry that can bring the kingdom of heaven, and open its doors to these outside thousands.—The Christian at Work.

A Quaint and Curious Sect.

THE TUNKERS.

Only those of our readers who have lived in the farming districts of Maryland, Pennsylvania or Virginia will have perhaps any personal knowledge of this feeblest of Christian flocks; and they probably will remember them only as hatless old men, with patriarchal beards to their waists, and bonnetless women in linsey gowns, who came down to the villages from the hills once or twice a year in their old-fashioned wagons to sell their produce and be hooted at by the children. A Tunker's wagon used to gather a staring crowd about it as readily as the band of a coming circus. In all parts of the country they are known as a solitary people, dwelling in hill-places, apart from politics, fashion or any kind of worldly turmoil. Their recent convocation was held on a quiet farm, according to their habit, rather than in a town; but it attracted large crowds from all parts of the State, who apparently were of the opinion that no circus or collection of wild beasts would offer so amazing a spectacle as this unnoticed sect, that for generations, without conflict or heat of any sort, had held itself aloof from the world in belief and deportment. The services also were of a remarkable character, consisting of the usual religious exercises of preaching, prayers and singing in Pennsylvania Dutch during the day; and in the evening the assemblage of all the brethren and sisters in a barn, where a love-feast supper of mutton broth was solemnly eaten, followed by an equally solemn washing of the feet of the whole multitude of believers. After these "services of love and humility" the communion was partaken of.

In spite of the oddity of these rites, we are told by observers that "the simplicity and devotional feeling of the worshipers was so great as to command the sympathy of the great multitude of spectators." We can readily conceive that the sight, nowadays, of hundreds of women, many of them young and pretty, dressed in scrupulously coarse and ugly attire, was enough to take the breath of any spectator. There is a delicate, devout coquetry in the Quaker's spotless white and dove color, of which the pretty Quaker knows how to reap the full advantage; but these poor Tunker women, in their ugly gowns and tight mob-caps, were literally mortifying the flesh for religion's sake. The recent convocation has brought other things to light about them. Not only do they abjure all vanity or finery in their dress or houses, but they utterly refuse to be led into quarrels, public or private; no Tunker bears arms, or was ever a party to a law suit; they urge hard work as an essential of religious life upon all their members; no Tunker was ever seen in a poor-house. When holy men of God among them are moved to preach his word, they receive no wages for so doing; they have no theological schools, consequently they never quarrel on doctrinal points; their ministers, having to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow or starve, have no time to deal in turgid affairs of sentiment, or to cover Christ's simple truth with their own foggy, hyperbolic fancies, or shame his church by their personal passions or prejudices. Their "fruits" in the Christian life are not very apparent perhaps; they build no million-dollar temples on the streets to glorify God in the holiness of architectural beauty; send out no missionaries to convert other Christian sects to their own way of thinking; there is no chance in their religious development for an outgrowth of a Cardinal McCloskey, a Spurgeon or a Beecher. The quiet Tunker in the mountains of Pennsylvania or Virginia tries to deal justly, walk humbly, and keep himself unspotted from the world, and is content.

After all, how odd it would be if when, as was foretold for these latter times, one powerful sect after another comes to the front, and we hear the cry, "Lo, here is Christ!" or "Lo, there!" the poor, comical Dutch Tunker, in his cabin in the hills should have been sheltering him all the while.—Tribune.

Power of a Hymn.

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone?"

Let me relate the tender tale this hymn will never fail to call to mind. Visiting in an adjoining State, a few years since, I listened to a sermon from a young student, who, in his great self-depreciation and outspoken yearnings for holiness himself, as well as power to present its claims to others, never dreamed that he was sowing the seeds of an awakening in a far distant town! Earnest, almost frenzied, in the grasping of his plea to the impenitent, striving to reach every heart present with the appeal, "Come, come to Jesus now, while there is room!" the hush that succeeded his impressive words was broken only by the voice of the speaker repeating half to himself, as if unconscious of the presence of many listeners:

"Must Jesus bear the cross alone,
And all the world go free?"

But O! the triumphant emerging from the "shadow of the cross" to the chiming of the reward, as he exclaimed after the lines:

"The consecrated cross I'll bear
Till death shall set me free!
And then go home, my crown to wear!
For there's a crown for me!"

Prophetic words! The cross he had borne for his Master's sake long and patiently—as those knew who knew his private life—was to be exchanged now for a crown indeed, for death came that week and set him free! Truly, the words of eternal life had come to us from one almost within the gates! His appeal was carried to the class who had never before heard his name, and one thoughtful young girl, receiving the message as if from Heaven, went home, and with penitential tears locked herself into her room, resolving not to come forth until she came as a redeemed soul. Her glowing face revealed the happy story before she could tell it herself, through her tears, at the prayer meeting that evening. Her conversion was, through God's blessing, the means of many others.—Congregationalist.

MR. STONE AND HIS "REMARKS."

Mr. Stone, a well-known and excellent Christian gentleman, belonging to one of the Murray Hill churches in New York city, was up in the country one summer, and, learning that an evening prayer meeting was in progress at the village church, walked in and took a seat in the back part of the room. The brother in the chair conducting the meeting, observing the stranger, left his seat, and, coming to Mr. Stone, said to him:

"What is your name?"

"My name is Stone."

"Where are you from?"

"I am from the city of New York."

"Are you one of the Lord's people?"

"I hope that I am," answered Mr. Stone, with becoming humility. The presiding genius, satisfied with the answers to his catechism, returned to his elevated seat, and at the end of the hymn arose and said:

"Will Bro. Stone, from New York, favor us with a few remarks?"

Mr. Stone, willing to do what he could, rose and made a few practical observations to the best of his ability. No sooner had he sat down than the presiding elder rose and said:

"Will Bro. Stone, of New York, ask the Lord to bless his feeble remarks!"

Undismayed by this commentary on his speech, Mr. Stone offered prayer, and the meeting proceeded as usual.—Christian Intelligencer.

PRESIDENT ALLEN, in his address at the fifty-ninth anniversary of the American Bible Society, introduced a plea for the Bible that was very forcible, and should be laid to heart by workers in every form of Christian activity. He said: "Our church extension work is important, but without the Bible we build on sand. The missionary cause appeals to every Christian heart and purse; but what can our missionaries do without the Bible? The Education Society is doing good; but when we educate men to expound the Bible we must give them the Bible to expound. Our publication houses and book concerns are useful agencies of our respective churches; but the American Bible Society has a publication house that prints and binds from two to three thousand volumes a day—volumes that are indispensable in all churches. Our Sunday schools are nurseries of piety, from which our churches draw a goodly number of members; but our Sunday schools are organized for the study of the Bible, and we must give them the Bible to study. Let us support all these institutions and societies; let us support them liberally; but let us bear in mind that the Bible is the corner-stone of them all. Let us therefore support our Bible societies no less liberally. These things we ought to do and not leave the other undone."

A LITTLE three-year-old in Nashville has sometimes to be threatened with a peach-tree "persuader." The little fellow has come to understand my allusion to the peach-tree, and usually subsides when it is spoken of. A few days ago, since the flowering of the fruit-trees, a slight reference was made to the same tree, when the little fellow made peace for that day by looking up and saying: "Why, mamma, the switches are covered with roses."

IT IS only our mental duration that we measure by visible and measurable objects, and there is nothing mournful in the contemplation for one who knows that the Creator made him to be the image of his own eternity, and who feels that in the desire for immortality he has one proof of his capacity for it.—Southey.

STRICT dealing may cool friendship, but loose dealing often converts friends into enemies.

Religious Intelligence.

—An invitation has been sent to Messrs. Moody and Sankey, by a conference of missionaries in India, to visit that part of the British empire.

—The new church edifice of the Rev. Thomas K. Beecher, of Elmira, N. Y., is rapidly approaching completion. It will occupy a full block, and will cost $135,000.

—The rector (colored) of Grace church, Anderson, and St. Luke's church, Newberry, S. C., has left the Protestant Episcopal Church and has joined the Reformed Episcopalians.

—The directors of the Lutheran General Synod's Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, Pa., have resolved to celebrate the jubilee of the institution next year, and raise funds for libraries and new buildings.

—A Reformed Episcopal church has been formed at Washington, Rappahannock county, Va., and a writer describes the prospects of that branch of the church as very promising in that portion of the country.

—The question of allowing women, in a New York Jewish synagogue, to sit with their families, instead of being seated separately, has been decided in the affirmative, to the great gratification of the good sisters.

—The only missionaries in the vast empire of Brazil are Presbyterians. They number twelve ordained ministers, one teacher, nine married ladies and four unmarried ladies. Two new churches were organized last year. On June 28 five persons united with the Presbyterian church at Rio Claro, Brazil, South America. Cheering news is also heard from St. Carlos. Protestantism is gaining favor all the time.

—The meeting of the Primitive Methodist Missionary Society was held in London, April 27. George Hodge, Esq., of Hull, presided. The income of the society for all purposes had been £46,706 5s. 5d., or £11,498 1s. 10d. more than it had ever realized before. Sixty-seven home missions were reported, employing 137 missionaries. Twenty-five new chapels and 15 new schools had been built, 38 new societies had been formed, 27 new Sunday schools started. The society had 16 stations and 8 missionaries in Australia; 26 stations and 14 missionaries in Victoria and Tasmania; 15 stations and 17 missionaries in New South Wales; 5 stations and 5 missionaries in Queensland; 64 stations and 79 preachers in Canada; and 4 stations and 7 missionaries in Africa—in all, in the home and colonial fields, 176 stations and 267 missionaries. An increase of 1,134 members was reported.

—Rev. Dr. Samson, who has long been engaged in negotiating with the Russian authorities for the toleration of his Baptist brethren, writes to the Baptist Missionary Magazine that the Russian government is doing all that it reasonably can in establishing a liberal policy. There are cases of religious persecution still uncorrected. These are mainly in Kiew, the "holy city" of the Greek Church in Russia, and result from popular prejudice, which the Russian government finds hard to overcome. Dr. Samson draws attention to the value of quiet efforts in securing religious liberty for subjects of foreign States. The quiet influence of the American Secretary of State twenty years ago caused the persecution of Baptists in Germany suddenly to cease. The quiet arguments which have been laid before the Russian government in regard to the religious persecutions of some of its subjects have produced a result which the loudly-heralded deputation of the Evangelical Alliance strove vainly to attain. With the Turkish authorities also quiet remonstrance is far more effective than are formal deputations. The remarks with which Dr. Samson closes his article are worthy of consideration: "If American philanthropists will but understand the absolute necessity of diplomacy in securing the ends of humanity in the old empires of Europe and Asia the leaven of truth will rapidly and surely work. Let the lovers of the spread of the gospel and of religious liberty kindly though firmly present to the attention of the foreign ministers at Washington cases worthy of their attention and they will be certainly attended to. Moreover, they will be as rapidly adjusted as can be like violations of right in our own city and country."

—The Freeman's Journal gives a summary of the Roman Catholic missions among the Indians of the United States. In the State of Maine about 1,000 Indians are attended to by Roman Catholic priests. In New York State 911 Catholic Iroquois live at St. Regis Village. In Michigan 2,500 Chippewas and Ottawas are under Catholic instruction on the shores and islands of Lakes Superior and Michigan. In Wisconsin there is a mission among the Menomoneo Indians numbering 1,480. In Minnesota there are numerous stations among about 10,000 Indians. In Kansas 2,800 Osage and 1,867 Potawatomie Indians are reported as connected with the church. In the Indian Territory there appears to be no organized Catholic work. In Montana 6,700 Indians, mostly Flegans, are included under Catholic care. In New Mexico and Arizona 14,000 Indians are spoken of as being largely Catholic. No figures are given in connection with the numerous missions in Idaho. In Washington Territory Catholic missionaries labor among 9,000 Indians. In Oregon there are 1,600 Catholic Indians recorded. In California there are more than 5,000 Catholic Indians. It would be impossible within these brief limits to mention the names of the tribes among which the Catholics are engaged. In many of them there are also Protestant missionaries. The Freeman's Journal makes bitter complaint against the agency system, claiming that Catholic Indians are thus put under Protestant control. Special complaint is made against the Quaker agent in Kansas, the Presbyterian agent in New Mexico, and the Methodist agent in the Round Valley Reservation in California.

Our Young People.

THE CORAL INSECT.

"What can I do for Jesus Christ,
So small a child as I?
Oh, mother, if I were a man,
Most earnestly I'd try
To do the utmost in my power
For my dear Savior's sake;
But such a little one as I
No sacrifice can make."

"I am not sure, my little son,
That children may not do
Much for the cause of Jesus Christ,
Even as young as you.
The coral insects, well you know,
In cold beneath the waves,
Little by little, day by day,
Down deep in ocean caves.

"Most silently they raise their piles
And reefs of wondrous forms;
And islands large to live are formed
By these same little worms.
So think of this, my little boy;
Strive to do what you can.
Little by little, day by day—
Don't wait till you're a man.

"There's much a little child can do
If earnestly he'll pray
That God will grant his heart's desire
And point to him the way.
The offerings of a child
In humble spirit given,
However small, will ever prove Acceptable in Heaven."

Band of Hope Review.

My Church Belle.

With the kind permission of the editor of the ADVOCATE I will tell the children about my Church Belle. It is not one of those sweet-voiced heralds that proclaim the hour of worship at the house of God; nor is it one of those gay, thoughtless creatures of society, called belles, who go to church sometimes. It is the queen of the poultry realm—a large, beautiful hen.

It will be six years on the ninth of August since she first came into my possession, and was the gift of a colored servant, who presented it on the anniversary of my birthday. I had been an invalid for some time, and this servant had come to inquire after my health, and, after answering her queries, laughingly added that no fairy had come on the important occasion to bestow a gift.

"That is too bad," she said as she left my room. In a few minutes she returned, bringing a small white chicken, about the size of a grown partridge.

"Here is a present for you, Miss ——, and it will keep you company while you're sick, these long, lonesome days. Won't have it? Then my feelings is hurt," she said, as I tried to frame an excuse for not taking what I mentally termed a pest instead of a pet. I saw that the good woman's "feelings would be hurt" did I refuse the token of her regard for me; so I accepted it, returning my warmest thanks.

"The gift isn't much, but I wish it may do you more good than you think for; and I hope you may get well, and be able to enjoy the fortune she may bring you."

"Well, I shall certainly name her Belle in honor of the donor," I said, endeavoring to repress a smile on beholding the unflattering prospect of my future financial prosperity.

It was certainly a very unpromising, diminutive "pullet," and not so plump and healthy-looking as my mother's numerous poultry tribe. But I thanked Belle, and assured her of my appreciation by making quite a pet of her gift and namesake. In a short time after receiving the founder of my fortune I was astonished to see how rapidly she grew; and the following Christmas she made a nest, and in a few weeks more my beautiful Belle was the proud mother of more than a dozen little "velvety babies," as some of the children called them.

For the first time in my life I took an interest in chickens, and the occupation not only proved pleasant, but profitable. During that year I sold $15 worth of her chickens; and the sum, though insignificant to others, relieved many of my wants during the long, tedious year of my affliction. From this I learned not to despise "the day of small things."

The second year, as I had no income, it grieved me because I was no longer able to earn something to pay our preacher, and my earnest inquiry was: "Lord, what can I do?" I loved my dear, aged pastor and his beloved wife, who visited me in my afflictions, and they brought me comfort and peace, when I had only a few thanks to return. A plan was unexpectedly revealed to me in answer to my inquiry; for in a short time our minister's wife asked me if I would like to sell some of my pets. I urged her to accept them as a thank-offering, as well as a free-will offering. It gave me great pleasure to be able to present a dozen of my little pets to my dear friends who had done so much for me. They were the first fruits of that year's increase, and it gave me "good luck," so the children say, to give the preacher a share; for she raised several large families that year.

The following year I dedicated my Belle to the church to which I belonged, and she raised eleven dollars' worth of her chickens for my pastor, notwithstanding the hawks and rats together destroyed at least fifteen, and she had two attacks of cholera. Her energy and spirits caused her to rally, and the next year I sold thirteen dollars' worth, at twenty-five cents each, and the hawks succeeded in catching several. This year she has penned three families, and is nearly ready to begin setting a fourth term; for I have a basket nearly full of her eggs.

I have been told that she was the first to set an example, and now there are a number of missionary hens, whose families are annually dedicated to the missionary cause. I also have a missionary hen—one of Belle's descendants—who has an interesting history of her own. I have taught her to sing for her meals. I have a great many pets, but Belle is the greatest among them all. Verily, she has been the founder of my fortune! How proudly she walks along when she has charge of a large, interesting family! Shall I have her photographed and send her picture to the editor? Some one says "It's not convenient," but I would like to do so. I tell her to do her very best, for she is in reality a member of my own beloved church—the Methodist Church.

One of my friends, a Methodist minister, says: "Think of the lasting good she has already done! She has aided the minister, set a worthy example, and has been the means by which many are shown an easy way to obtain money to pay the preacher." Is she not a wonderful Church Belle?

From Our Little Friends.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., July 22, 1875.

EDITOR ADVOCATE: Really, do not you think it is too bad the way some of the girls put the blame on Tom because we're so long hearing "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest?" They say he keeps dear old Father Goodale from telling about it. I'm not self-conceited, but I think I've found why we do not hear the story. Grandfather Goodale wants to give us advice—make us take an interest in things which we might not if we did not have some stimulus. So he set Tom talking; says he will not let him continue; says when Tom is through we shall have the story. The dear, shy old man! He won't let Tom stop. He wants to simplify Tom's words to our comprehension. Gallant Tom! He will not even tell the little ladies they're hard on him. And even the little home folks censure him. Never mind, Tom! If you have swallowed, without digesting, a quantity of brain food, Time will regulate it, and you will show what you really are—talented. I wish you and grandfather would come to our town. Tell him we thank him for his interest in us, although we are suffering for that story. And you, Mr. Editor, you've a host of friends about here to advocate your cause. With respect,

ELEVEN YEARS OLD.

SUNNY SOUTH, DESOTO PARISH, LA., July 24, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have thought for some time that I would write to you, as I see so many little boys and girls are writing to you. I am going to try. I am a little girl ten years old. I have never been to school. Mamma teaches me at home. I read the ADVOCATE regularly. I feel so anxious about "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." I know I have no idea what it will be. I hope Grandpa Goodale will tell us soon. I noticed, not long ago, when grandpa wasn't well, that he called on Tom to write, and such words as he did use about bees and hornets, etc.! It was all French to me. I was almost glad when Charlie began to pelt him with his blocks. I liked Harry's story very much. Little folks can understand it.

Mr. Editor, if you know Grandpa Goodale, please tell him to finish the story himself, and not let Tom talk any more, and then we will listen to Tom. I wish somebody would write Tom a letter and use big words that he did not understand, and then he would know how we all feel about it. Good-by.

From your little friend,

REBECCA M. SCOTT.

BIG CANE, LA., August 5, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking for a long time that I would write to your paper, but I did not have the courage until I saw so many little boys and girls were writing letters to you; so I thought I would write, as I am a little girl. My pa takes the ADVOCATE. I am very fond of reading the interesting pieces in the Child's Corner. The ADVOCATE has not been quite as interesting to me as it used to be when it had those interesting letters in it from Mexico and Oregon. Tell Grandpa Goodale he must tell some more pretty stories, and tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest" first, and his frog stories afterward.

I attend Sunday school. Bro. Johnston is our pastor this year. He preaches such nice sermons. I like him very much. I must close. I hope I have not written too long a letter.

Your little friend, LUCY M.

GREAT folks may set the town in a blaze; common people mustn't even light a lantern.

THE REMEMBRANCE OF THE RIGHTEOUS.

It is written that "the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." In this world the mass of individuals is soon forgotten. The most, whether good or bad, live in obscurity, known only to a limited circle of relatives and friends, and when they are dead they are soon out of mind. Their memories are fresh for awhile in the hearts of a few, but a brief period suffices to obliterate every trace of their earthly existence. Children may remember their grandparents, and retain some fragments of family history further back, but their remote ancestors are mere shadows and myths, unless they were eminent enough to secure a place in history.

It is doubtless true that good people, however humble, are remembered longer in the community than others. Their memories are green and fragrant when those of the wicked have passed into oblivion. There are local reputations that survive in neighborhoods, and are gratefully cherished for generations, because of the benevolence and exalted piety connected with them. The footprints of holy and useful living are not soon obliterated. The effects of such living may never be lost, but the name of the actor and his personal history are, after the lapse of a few years, swept away.

Righteousness, when connected with great and shining talents, and associated with eminent positions, is an important factor in even earthly immortality. Moses, Abraham, David, Paul, are among the righteous who shall be in everlasting remembrance in this world. Augustine, Luther, Calvin, Wesley and others will live in their works and in the impress of their characters upon the ages while the world stands. Righteousness alone, however, would not have made them thus to be remembered. Millions as pure in heart and as blameless in life have been comparatively unknown and are forgotten. From the days of Nimrod to the present time the most remembered personages have been without claims to sanctity. Cæsar, Alexander, Napoleon, will continue to be the study and wonder of men to the latest period of time. What, then, for us common folks, is the meaning and application of the declaration that the righteous shall be remembered? There are notorious criminals; stage actors, dancers and buffoons who will be thought of when the most of us are consigned to oblivion. Perhaps the words are prophetical of the good time coming when righteousness shall be estimated at its real value, and when there can be no enduring reputation without it. The reference may be to that time when the world shall concede that it owes all its blessings, under God, to the righteous who have lived and fought the good fight of faith, and when the world shall return to crown its real heroes, and to do justice to those who have been its true benefactors.

Or, if this be improbable, then we are certainly permitted to look beyond the present life to "the manifestation of the sons of God." This is the only immortality, the only sense in which we can conceive of an everlasting remembrance as belonging to the righteous. The righteous are to shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Their character and works are in God's keeping, a book of remembrance is written before him, and he will gather them in that day when he makes up his jewels. The remembrance of the righteous will have only begun when the names of the renowned sinners of history are fading out in the darkness and sinking from sight forever in the depths of perdition. While the righteous begin to realize the immortality of goodness, and to rejoice in the splendors of the heavenly society, the wicked and their memorials are covered forever.

MR. MOODY'S ILLUSTRATIONS.

Dr. T. O. Summers, Jr., writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate, gives some account of the last servics of Messrs. Moody and Sankey in London. We have met with many of Mr. Moody's illustrations in the papers, but the one which Dr. Summers was fortunate enough to hear has not been generally published. Probably the friends of Mr. Moody were ashamed of it, and had it suppressed. Dr. Summers, Sr., in an editorial comment, says:

Our English exchanges report the address of Mr. Moody, alluded to in our London correspondence, but prudently suppress the statement of Mr. Moody that he had often seen the slave pursued by the slave-hunter and his dogs to the borders of Canada. The editors knew that he drew on his imagination, or some other inventive faculty, for that fact. Fanaticism naturally leads to falsehood. We are not sufficiently skilled in casuistry to reconcile such palpable fabrications with a conscience void of offense toward God and man.

We are as much at a loss as is the venerable editor of the Nashville. Fanaticism, of course, naturally leads to falsehood, and so also does the habit of overmuch illustration and anecdote telling. Mr. Moody doubtless thought that his fugitive negro seeking freedom under the British flag would take with a London crowd, and the temptation to use him was too strong. He had often seen him. Mr. Moody must have been in a vision, "whether in the body or out of the body"—in dreams perhaps—in a clairvoyant state. The extract from Dr. Summers' letter is as follows:

At night I heard Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Camberwell Hall. Mr. Moody addressed some twelve thousand people, as far as could be estimated. So much has been written concerning these evangelists that I need only give you a running account of this their last service here. Mr. Moody read the history of Christ and the woman of Samaria at the well, and then proceeded to talk at random upon the subject of saving grace. The turning-point of his remarks was instantaneous conversion, and, as you remark in your paper of July 3, just received to-day, the whole discourse smacked sharply of Antinomianism. At the conclusion of his remarks he called on all those who would receive Christ to speak out; then all over the great assembly could be heard the voices from every class of society: "I will," "I will," "So will I," and so on. The illustrations of Mr. Moody are very vivid, and his imagination often deceives into the promulgation of conceptions for realities. For example; he said that he had often seen the poor negro, with bloody feet, running for his life to get under the Union Jack of Victoria in Canada, while his master with the dogs was close at his heels, to take him back far in the South, where all his hope would be lost, and O how the negro would run for his freedom! Now Mr. Moody never saw that in his life, and it is just this that gives our Southern people such a reputation in Europe. These gentlemen go now to Wales, and from thence return to Chicago.

LETTER FROM MEXICO.

Mr. Editor: One of the events of the hour was the arrival to-day of Gen. Juan Cortina, a prisoner of State, under strong guard. An immense crowd assembled at Buena Vista depot to get a sight of the man who had so long been the pest and scourge of two nations. He was received with a significant silence. Not a whisper of sympathy was heard. Though it is but reasonable to suppose that many factions enemies of the government were present, who, in so far as Cortina represented the opposition, would be in sympathy with him. But so open, so great, so notorious had been this man's crimes that there was no ground for even a personal friend to occupy. He had become the avowed enemy of his own country, as well as the sworn foe of the land that had given him birth. He would have involved Mexico in a hapless war with her best friend. Failing in this, no less would he have brought on an internecine strife among his own people. He seems to have reached a point where the peace of national friends was as little regarded as the life of a fellow-man, or the ownership of a cow or horse. All was one to him.

There was to many people in the United States a criminal delay and indifference on the part of the Mexican government to this man's actions. This is not the case. Cortina was a general in the Federal army. It was believed that he would obey the order to report to the War Department. He agreed to do so. When the time came he begged delay, alleging apparently good reasons. The delay was granted. Still he failed to report. In the meantime it seems he was using the opportunity for strengthening his defenses. It was no easy matter to arrest him. He was desperate. He had many desperate men around him. He was strongly fortified. A large force sent after him would have defeated the object by driving him to the mountains, or, in case of success, causing much bloodshed. The affair was well planned and bravely executed. It is believed that it was as quickly done as the circumstances of the case would allow. Let this be as it may, he is now in the hands of the authorities. The sincere desire of the Mexican government to deal justly and maintain peace, and the well-known energetic character of the Secretary of War, gives assurance that Cortina will have a speedy trial, and have meted out to him rigorous justice. His seems to be a clear case of the most deliberate mutiny, to say nothing of lesser (in the eyes of military law) crimes. All army regulations, we believe, decree death to such. This may be, in all probability will be, the fate of Cortina.

The senatorial elections passed off very quietly. But for one coming occasionally upon the voting precincts, nothing would have been known of it. The masses seemed to take but little interest in the matter. Your readers will remember that the Congress of last fall and winter provided for another House, similar to our own. Heretofore our Congress consisted of but one; now it is composed of two houses—a senate and house of representatives. This undoubtedly will give strength and symmetry to the legislative forces. The new rule will go into effect in September. The Liberal, or, as it is known by a certain class of oppositionists, the Lerdo party, were triumphant, the minority being very small. The politics of Mexico are not particularly complicated. There are two opposition wings to the present administration—anti-Lerdo, and anti-Liberal or church party. They have both, through their organs, from time to time, spoken very severely of the administration. They charge fraud, force, etc., in carrying the elections. Still, however harshly and severely they may have given utterance to their sentiments, it is not so harsh, so bitter, so severely personal as the party papers and leaders of their sister republic.

The Liberal party seems now doubly strong—securely intrenched. Strong, but as it deems it necessary, measures may be expected. Everything appears hopeful. The onward and upward march of Mexico is manifest. Railroad enterprises are fostered. Education is receiving the attention it merits. The resources of the country are being developed. Inducements are being offered encouraging the exportation of its products. The sun shines brightly. All is peaceful.

However, one reading the sensational telegrams and articles coming to us from the United States, it would be supposed that Mexico was in a state of chronic revolution. Attention is more frequently called to the doings of revolutionists and pronunciamientos by the American papers than our own. There are roving bands of men calling themselves revolutionists, and there are frequently pronunciamientos, in big letters and fiery style. But they have but little weight or influence. Mexico has an immense frontier. She has vast mountain ranges. Irresponsible hands have hiding-places and outlets innumerable; and then a final resort of dispersing and returning to their homes when pressed by regular troops, so that it is next to impossible to keep them down. As a usual thing, the State troops are sufficient to disperse them when they become troublesome. A leader of the revolutionists in the State of Oaxaca issued a proclamation, not long since, calling upon Federal soldiers to desert and join his forces. It was a bold thing in the man, but had no weight, seemingly, whatever.

A more serious and annoying source of trouble appears to be the determination of Romanism, at some points, not to obey the reform laws. One of these, and seemingly most annoying to popery, is that which prohibits religious processions. These gorgeous displays were heretofore the great power of Romanism with the masses. The laws of reform put a stop to it. But frequently, in the smaller towns and cities of the interior, attempts are made to have processions, law or no law. Sometimes they are successful. On the eighteenth instant, in Toluca, the capital of the State of Mexico, the leading priest arranged for a grand procession in honor of "Vuestra Senora del Carmen." The acting Governor arrested the padre and fined him $200. A mob gathered in front of the palace, and with horrible cries and threats demanded the priest's liberation. It seems that the Governor weakly yielded. The priest was not only liberated, but the procession allowed. Cries of "Death to the Federal government!" "Death to Protestants!" "Life to the Cura!" (priest,) "Life to Santa Carmen!" filled the town with just alarm and apprehension. The city papers have been prompt and severe in their denunciations of the cowardice of the chief officers.

The "laws of reform" are just. They bear equally upon all. What they prohibit in popery is likewise prohibited in Protestantism. Protestants seem content and happy in their obedience. As good citizens they could not be otherwise. Not only to obey, but to pray for the "authorities that be," is the doctrine of the gospel.

This "reform" in Mexico appears to be the spontaneous expression of a strong liberal government, the necessity of which does not as yet exist in the United States. In Mexico it is but a pronunciamiento against even the shadow of connection between Church and State. The old religion of the country, whose creed makes the State secondary, was believed, on all occasions possible, to use its forces in carrying out its principles. In this there was a like pronunciamiento against religious toleration. This has been the basis of Mexico's fight for the past fifty years. She has made a noble fight. She has done well. She leaves religion to carry out its mission, without interference, except when interference becomes a necessity to save the State from spoliation. She guarantees an open Bible and an untrammeled gospel. What less could she do? Hasta otra vista.

Field Notes.

Mr. Editor: The field is white and the harvesters are putting in their sickles. The laborers are preparing to garner many sheaves during this year's harvest-time. Invitations have passed to and fro for help, and hope is brightening and courage freshening and faith strengthening under the promises that have been given.

"Lord, thy help is greatly needed, Help can only come from thee."

After awhile I hope to be able to send reports of revivals "all along the line." Since my last we have done very little in the way of pushing forward. Our people generally are quite gloomy. The continued rains in some sections, and the gradual encroachments of the high water, are the subjects of talk and fear. The fact of two overflows in one year is more than even a swamp farmer can stand. Very few of them can understand that "God sitteth king upon the floods." The reports from above are favorable for an early decline, and that decline must be quick and fast or many will suffer greatly. These high waters interfere very much with the travel of the presiding elder. By bogging and swimming, by boat and by rail, I have managed to get to all appointments except one. The preacher in charge there is equal to such emergencies, and I hope to hear from him a good report. Every preacher ought to be made a presiding elder, for he can fully appreciate the itinerant idea only after he has had the experiences of that office. No man should hold the office more than two terms, and some should have it only long enough to make one round. Not being able to reach my appointment, I turned aside to worship with the brethren of another Conference. The day was gloomy and raining, and but few were in attendance. The pastor gave us a plain talk on the new birth, which was edifying to me. How long will it be before our preachers will get down off their stilts and talk to the people of Jesus and his salvation? The common people do not go on stilts. It is said of the greatest preacher of whom we have ever read: "The common people heard him gladly." The circle of sympathy in which people live is not generally very large, and as preachers we must get inside this circle if we would do good. Literary and scientific and philosophic and metaphysical preaching is not the thing that the times demand from the pulpit. Let all that be given over to the schools and the book-writers, and let the preachers tell, in simple words coming up out of earnest souls, of Jesus and his love for men. Let the preachers be baptized with the Holy Ghost, and then listen for the shout of victory. If one hundred and twenty Christians on the day of Pentecost were the means of the conversion of three thousand sinners, how many sinners ought six hundred thousand Methodists, imbued with the same power and spirit, be the means of converting in the next three months? "Alas! my brother," said the old prophet, and so say I.

Presiding Elder.

From England.

Mr. Editor: Moody and Sankey have finished their labors in London. Much good has been done there, as well as in the other places where the two evangelists have visited. The nobility have been reached, and have heard the gospel proclaimed with earnestness, directness and great plainness of speech, and it is to be hoped that many of them have been profited thereby.

They wound up their labors by a convention. Ministers from all parts of the country attended and reported concerning the work in the places where they lived. The reports were all marvelously cheering, and showed how powerfully the Holy Spirit is at work, and how extensively also.

It is not to be expected that defections among the converts will not occur, for there will be many such. Such things follow all revivals of religion. Taking this into consideration, there will yet remain abiding fruit on so large a scale as to give the movement a place among the chief revivals which have marked the history of the church.

Mr. Pearsall Smith and his wife, also from the United States, are conducting meetings in the interest of holiness. They visited Germany, and were received with favor in that country. Scholars and theologians attended their meetings, and were impressed favorably in reference to their work. There is much that is commendable in their views, but there is error mixed up with them. The Christian life is not two, but one. It is a growth. It has its stages. It is a graduated approach into the divine likeness. It is not feeling, it is not sensation, it is not experience; but all these together, with practice superadded. This is a practical world. Its duties are practical. Christianity does not abrogate these duties, but rather prepares for doing them more conscientiously and faithfully. The path to the higher life is more practical than meditative, and the characteristics and evidences of it are chiefly practical also.

Eminent preachers and theologians have warned the people against certain unscriptural phases of the teaching of this man and his wife, which was both timely and necessary, and will no doubt do good. Error is never so dangerous as when clothed in unctuous and pious garb.

Specialists may have a work to do, but I am doubtful anent the utility of their course. Of the twelve, not one was appointed to irregular labor to a special mission. The ministry and the word are appointed of God to accomplish his purpose in the world, and they are enough. If the ministry is unfaithful, its infidelity is rebuked by raising up others not in the Aaronic line to do what they failed to accomplish. But it is a ministry still—a priesthood in a Christian sense still.

Convocation is about to have laymen in it. It is the unanimous opinion of the bench of bishops that the laity should be represented in it and assist in its deliberations. Thus laymen are coming to the front. Women may become an element in ecclesiastical assemblies ultimately. But I hope the day is far off when that calamity shall occur. I hope I shall be safe in Abraham's bosom before it arrives.

The English Wesleyan Conference met yesterday in Sheffield. The Preparatory Committee have been deliberating for a week, and discussing and adjusting the financial affairs of the denomination. All the branches of Methodism report this year an increase in their membership. This is satisfactory and encouraging. The increase in the numerical strength of the Methodist New Connection is small. This branch of Methodism never grew rapidly. It was the first in the field of secession, and adopted the popular element of lay representation. The present English Conference is expected to be one of great interest.

Observer.

New Iberia.—Rev. B. F. White, pastor of our church at New Iberia, writing August 17, says:

Dear Bro. Parker: God's blessings are on us. Probably one hundred have been reclaimed, about thirty converted, twenty-six accessions to our fold, and a number seeking sanctification. I think the interest is not abating. The Methodist church at New Iberia has the high privilege of furnishing the first steamboat owner who, instead of a "bar," has the Bible. May the Lord bless Bro. John Pharr in this truly noble Christian effort. May his Bible prove a "bar" in the way of many sinners in their downward progress! Yea, an impassable "bar."

Rev. John Mathews, pastor of Carondelet Street Methodist Episcopal Church South, of this city, closed a protracted meeting of two weeks' duration on Sunday night, August 15. Twenty-two persons professed religion, and there are still a considerable number seeking. This charge is enjoying a high degree of spiritual prosperity.

Laying of the Corner-Stone

OF WESLEY MONUMENTAL CHURCH, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.

A few minutes past five o'clock Rev. A. M. Wynn, pastor of the Wesley Methodist church, announced that the ceremonies would be commenced and conducted according to the programme, copies of which had been distributed to the audience.

Rev. G. G. N. MacDonell, formerly of this city, opened services by reading the hymn, composed by Rev. E. H. Myers for the occasion, which was sung, the entire assembly joining with the choir.

After the singing the venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce offered up a very eloquent prayer, and then read the collect according to the formula prescribed in the Discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

At the close of Dr. Pierce's reading Rev. A. M. Wynn arose and stated that through the kindness of friends they had received a very large number of rare coins and relics; that the list was so long it was deemed advisable to dispense with the reading, though he could not omit mentioning a few of the most prominent. In conclusion he stated that the names of the donors, and the various articles contributed by them, would be inscribed in a book provided especially for the purpose, which would be preserved with the archives of the church, and also published in the city papers.

Mr. Wynn also stated that it had been found necessary to procure two boxes for the corner-stone, one being insufficient to contain all the articles which had been donated; that Col. R. D. Walker, chairman of the building committee, had had these boxes properly sealed and placed in the niche, and everything was in readiness for

LAYING THE CORNER-STONE.

Dr. Lovick Pierce then formally and solemnly consecrated the corner-stone, and the house to be erected thereon, to the worship of almighty God. The stone was lowered into position and was subsequently bricked over.

At the close of the above-mentioned ceremonies Rev. E. H. Myers, D. D., pastor of Trinity Methodist church, arose and made some appropriate and eloquent remarks, introducing Rev. Dr. Axson, of the Independent Presbyterian Church, who delivered the address.—Southern Christian Advocate.

From Oregon.

Rev. T. B. White, writing to the Pacific Methodist, July 20, says:

Our church at Albany approaches completion. It is a model of beauty and symmetry. We will not be ashamed of it. Our church at Independence will be ready for the Bishop. Ought to have been built when it was started a year ago. Lots, subscriptions, lumber and workmen were then employed.

The weather is excessively hot—in the nineties. Getting quite dusty. Hay harvest is on hand. Thousands of tons of fragrant, newly-mown hay are being housed for winter use. Grain is fine, and

"Stands ready for the reaper's gathering hand,
And all the winds slept soundly."

That will do for poetry. "Winds slept soundly" will not do for this place. A gap in the mountains gives us a brisk sea breeze generally. Now it is desirable, delightful, but for nine months in the year it is penetrating and hard on weakly people.

My family are in a pretty good state of preservation. My own condition is impaired by excessive labor. Would be glad to do more for the church I love so much if I could. Wife and little ones would be so glad to spend some time with our San Francisco friends. Next thing to it is reading your fresh and well-freighted paper.

The work of God is reviving in most of our district.

Pacific Methodist College.—The board of trustees of Pacific Methodist College met, according to appointment, at the college on Monday, July 21, 1875, at ten o'clock A. M.

Present—Rev. J. C. Simmons (in the chair,) Judge Jackson Temple, A. Fine, E. T. Farmer, Rev. S. W. Davies, Rev. S. Brown, Rev. J. C. Pendergrast, Capt. W. E. Cocke and Rev. O. P. Fitzgerald.

Opened with prayer by Rev. J. C. Pendergrast.

O. P. Fitzgerald was elected secretary pro tem.

The formal resignation of Prof. E. E. Hoss was tendered by Dr. Fitzgerald and accepted by the board.

On motion of A. Fine the janitor's fee was fixed at $2 (?) per term of five months.

Miss L. Werlein was elected music teacher. Miss Werlein is a teacher of unusual ability and large experience.

Prof. —— Jones, A. M., was chosen to fill the professorship made vacant by the resignation of Prof. Alexander. Prof. Jones is a graduate of Emory College, Ga., and has taught with great success. He is proved a young man of ability and high promise.

Rev. C. Chamberlin, A. M., of Sacramento, Cal., was chosen to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Prof. Hoss. Prof. Chamberlin is a gentleman of high culture and varied acquirements, and has had successful experience as a teacher.

The corps of teachers in Pacific Methodist College is now full and able. The next session will open on the fifth of August with very favorable prospects.

O. P. Fitzgerald,
Secretary pro tem.

The Evangelist says of the Drew Seminary: "We bid God-speed to the prosperity of an institution which is in charge of such men as Dr. Hurst and his associates. They are doing a good and great work not only for the Methodist denomination, but for the world, and deserve the help they ask."

Is not suffering, when it comes, usually more endurable than we had imagined it would be? If so, may not the actual amount of suffering in the world be less than we suppose?

MARRIED.

ROSE—RAMSEY.—At the residence of the bride's father, Dr. J. B. Ramsey, in the parish of Vermilion, by Rev. W. Shepherd, on the twelfth of August, 1875, Mr. Edmond A. Rose to Miss Hattie A. Ramsey, all of the above parish.

The Mercury, Meridian, Miss., will please copy.

POTEET—JOHNSTON.—August 9, 1875, at the residence of the bride's father, in Jeanerette, La., by Rev. B. F. Wilde, Mr. William Poteet to Miss Adelia J. Johnston.

FAISON—CARTER.—July 21, 1875, at the residence of R. C. Hult, Esq., the bride's brother-in-law, by the Rev. J. D. Murff, Mr. R. B. Folson, of Sunflower county, Miss., and Miss Sallie Carter, of Morehouse parish, La.

Periodicals.

THE WAY OF HOLINESS is the title of a handsomely printed monthly published by the Southern Tract Association, Spartanburg, S. C.—William Baker and R. C. Oliver, editors. The Home Altar, published at McMinnville, Tenn., is merged into the Way of Holiness. Touching its doctrinal teachings the editors say:

To many of the readers of this initial number of the Way of Holiness it is scarcely necessary to say anything in reference to the doctrinal teachings to be set forth in its columns, it being simply a continuation of the Home Altar under a new title. Like it, the promotion of Christian holiness being the distinctive object and aim of its publication, it will maintain this great Bible doctrine as set forth therein, as an attainment to be made at any time after justification by faith. It will discard alike the erroneous view which lowers the standard of holiness to that of justification, as well as the unscriptural teaching which makes the attainment one of works, to be developed in the believer by a process of growth which always places the attainment of it in the distant future.

In discussing the question its pages will be free from controversy proper. Nothing of a controversial character will be admitted. A clear statement of the doctrine, as set forth by Wesley, Fletcher, Watson and others of the same school, sustained by Scripture proof, will indicate the course to be pursued, accompanied from time to time with the narration of the experience of those who have made the attainment.

WE HAVE RECEIVED Ali Baba and Aladdin of the series of Chailen's Dime Arabian Nights Entertainments. The translation of this series is said to be better than any other, excluding everything offensive to pure taste, or detrimental to the morals of the young. Published by the American News Company, New York.

THE GALAXY for September has: Genevieve Through Utah, Symptoms, Sherman's Memoirs, The Fount of Castaly, A Peculiar Princess, French Plays, Summer Days in London, The Spelling of the Future, and other articles. Published by Sheldon & Co., New York. Price, $4 a year.

WE HAVE RECEIVED specimen pages of a new pictorial history of the United States. It is to be a complete history from the discovery of America until the close of the first centennial in 1876, by Benson J. Lossing. Johnson, Wilson & Co., New York, publishers.

MORTON'S MONTHLY HOME AND SCHOOL for August has: Sea Tortoises or Turtles, Experience is the Best Teacher, Physical and Mental Training, Facts in the History of Clock-Making, and other articles. A very instructive and valuable number.

THE WAY OF HOLINESS is the title of a new monthly, published at Albany, Ga. George J. Griffiths, D. D., and Willis M. Russell, editors. We wish the enterprise abundant success.

SOUTHERN TRACT ASSOCIATION FOR THE PROMOTION OF HOLINESS.—Rev. R. C. Oliver and Rev. William Baker, D. D., says the Christian Neighbor, have united in establishing at Spartanburg, S. C., a publishing house. Their publications will all have a bearing in accord with the above heading. Their first publication, a monthly, will be out in a few days—called the Way of Holiness. They expect at no distant day to publish also a weekly, to be called, we think, the Southern Methodist. In connection with these periodicals they purpose issuing tracts, etc., all intended to bring the church and, as far as they may be reached, the outside world to an appreciation and embracement of the great end of all the means of grace—holiness.

BEWARE of the geese when the fox preaches.

DONATION OF A LIBRARY.—Mr. Editor: Our Sunday school at this place was highly elated, a few days ago, on the reception of a handsome library of Sunday school books, containing sixty-two volumes, donated by an unknown person. A resolution of thanks was voted by the school to the donor, and requested to be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, that the kind giver might know it was received and many young hearts made glad.

LOVICK WREN.

PINE GROVE, WEBSTER PARISH, LA., August 13, 1875.

THE public libraries of Europe have scarcely doubled themselves since the year 1849, while in America they have increased twenty-fold. In 1873 Europe had 7,550,000 volumes in its public libraries; America, 19,000,000. So circulating statistics show; but is that correct?

Publisher's Department.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondents can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La.	$2 00
Nov. 16, 1871—From Canton, Miss.	2 00
June 11, 1875—From Selma, Ala.	5 00
Nov. 24, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine	2 00
Dec. 3, 1871—From Jas. Williams, Piney, Ala.	5 00
Apr. 5, 1875—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn	2 00
June —, 1875—From Baton Rouge, La.	2 50
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss.	2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others how neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed. Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and run more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money, as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

HOMEOPATHIC PRESCRIPTIONS.—Dr. William H. Holcombe, homeopathic physician, No. 139 Canal street, New Orleans, offers his services to those who prefer to use the homeopathic remedies, but may not be in reach of a physician of that school. He proposes to prescribe by letter, as will be found by perusing his card in another column. We have known the doctor for more than twenty years, and have ever regarded him as one of the most thorough and skillful of his profession.

STEAM ENGINES AND BOILERS.—George W. Tifft, Sons & Co. are well and favorably known throughout the country as among the very best manufacturers of the above-named articles to be found in this country. Indeed we have for many years been accustomed to feel safer when in proximity to the boilers of their manufacture than any others, and when we have seen the name of the firm on machinery it has increased our confidence in it. See advertisement.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, BATON ROUGE, LA.—The above-named institution has for many years, in the estimation of the best judges, occupied the front rank among educational institutions, and in our opinion none has been more justly entitled to it. But few men, North or South, are in point of culture, moral fitness, vast experience, and a deep sense of the responsibility of the position, so well fitted for it as W. H. N. Magruder. See advertisement.

HOMER COLLEGE.—The reports of the above-named institution are very encouraging. The outlook is represented as truly cheering. The terms of board and tuition are as reasonable as any one could ask. Homer is located in a fine community—high, picturesque and healthy. Be sure to read the advertisement which appears this week

SUGAR MILLS.—The attention of sugar planters is directed to the advertisement of the excellent firm of George L. Squier & Bro., Buffalo, N. Y., who manufacture the most approved patterns of sugar mills, evaporators, engines, centrifugals, corn mills, horse powers and water-wheels. Send for their catalogue.

POCKET INHALER.—W. R. Crumb, of Buffalo, N. Y., has patented a pocket inhaler, described by a cut in connection with his advertisement in another column. It is a matter of interest to those who may have need of remedies for throat and bronchial diseases.

THE Weed Sewing Machine Company want agents for the sale of their light-running, popular and durable machine. See their card in another column.

Habits of Bees.

There are peculiar habits of the honey bee, of which the apiarian takes advantage in his efforts to secure the profits of their labor. This success must depend materially upon his understanding of those habits, and suiting his means to them. They have the habit uniformly of constructing the comb in such form that its center shall be occupied by the brood. The outside sheets of comb, the outer edges of the central sheets and their upper edges are all reserved for the storing of the honey gathered for food to supply them from one floral season to another. We can hardly conceive how the most skillful could devise it better. The central location of the brood secures to them the warmth required for their life and growth, their hatching and maturity. They are surrounded by the workers to guard and protect them from enemies, and as soon as they leave their cells their necessary food is found in their near vicinity.

The colony of bees commences its labors in the top of its home at the center of the hive if the swarm is suited to the size of the hive. Provision for and production of brood is the first thing, resulting in filling the hive in the manner described. Let one examine a hive when filled and he could hardly fail to discover from the honey stored on the four sides of the hive, and in the top edges of the comb, that the place for surplus honey boxes is on the four sides and top of the hive. A breeding apartment or hive, twelve inches square inside and fifteen and one-half inches high, would measure nearly 2,200 cubic inches. But we have never seen the box hive except with top boxes, giving room for 24 pounds or a little more, according to the shape of the box. But bees are rather slow in their movements to pass through an inch hole through an inch board, even if it is directly over them; and side boxes to be reached through an inch hole in an inch board, I believe, are rarely entered. Could we get our surplus boxes to the comb in the breeding apartment, so that the guide comb in the surplus box is as readily discovered and reached from the breeding apartment as from one sheet of comb to another in the breeding apartment, we may imagine that there will be little delay in entering the boxes.

Only a few years since our best bee-keepers seem to have been very well satisfied with the box hive and an average of ten pounds of surplus per colony. But with this yield those cannot be satisfied who have averaged 100 pounds from their colonies in improved hives. My opinion or judgment still is that 200 pounds of surplus from one colony, in one season, in boxes from five to eight pounds capacity, is about as much as we can expect reasonably from one colony. Farmers who ought to secure the honey in their own fields by simply placing one, two or three colonies in their fields in such hives, may secure from 100 to 400 or 500 pounds of surplus annually with little trouble, except to place and remove the surplus boxes in their season.—Jasper Hazen, in Cultivator and Country Gentleman.

How to Boil Meats.—Boiling, when done in the usual way—namely, that of making up a large fire, setting the pot on it, and giving it a stir just as the meat is put into the boiling water—is a method that insures its hardening. Just the reverse is the proper plan. A moderate fire should be made, and the sancepan or pot containing the meat should be placed either at the back of the range or on a trevet, so as to heat slowly as the fire burns. Then when it has come to a boil it should be removed to such a distance from the blazing coals as to keep the water simmering at the boiling-point until the process of cooking is completed. This is the simplest and cheapest of all methods of cooking meats. There should be just enough water to keep the joint covered. As soon as the scum of grease, blood and impurities rises to the surface it should be removed with a skimmer. Then add a little cold water, which will cause the rest of the scum to rise.

When this is removed nothing more need be done except to allow the whole to simmer at the boiling-point until ready for serving. If you intend the water in which the meat is cooked for soups or gravies, put in the joint before the water boils. If, on the contrary, you wish to confine all the juices of the meat, do not put the joint into the water until it is at the boiling-point. The length of time required to boil a joint depends on the size. Twenty minutes to the pound, counting the time from the moment the water begins to boil, is a good allowance; but if the meat is very fresh killed, or tough and old, it will require a longer time. In cold weather twenty minutes more should be allowed. A small quantity of salt should be put into the water first.—New York Sun.

Good Way to Make Cottage Cheese.—A cottage spinster, "Roselie," in communicating her practice of making cottage cheese, says: "I take some sweet milk and stand it on top of the stove in a new tin pail or pan, shaking it occasionally; that the forming curd may not settle to the bottom. I turn the edges gently, that the curd may form evenly, taking care not to break it and not let it cook too fast. If the heat is about right it will be done in half an hour. Then I drain off the whey slowly, pressing down on the curd until only whey enough remains in it that the cheese will not be too dry—just moist enough to mix well. Then I salt to taste, add a good lump of butter and work well with my hand, then pack it down in a crock, leaving all the moisture in it. This is better than to press it into dry bails. Set it away in the coolest corner of the cellar or sprlug-house. Take it out into a deep white dish, and very carefully dip out and lay over the top of it a few spoonfuls of thick cream, sweet or sour, but the sour is preferable. Lay a clean, bright spoon beside the dish, and your wholesome poem is ready for criticism, cold, white and pretty, and one of the nicest dishes known for tea.

Perfume of Flowers Healthful.—An Italian professor has made researches which lead him to assert that vegetable perfumes exercise a healthful influence on the atmosphere, converting its oxygen into ozone, and thus increasing its oxidizing influence. The essences that develop the largest quantity of ozone are those of cherry, laurel, palmarosa, cloves, lavender, mint, juniper, lemons, fennel and bergamot; those that give it in less quantity are anise, nutmeg, calcput and thyme. The flowers of the narcissus, hyacinth, mignonette, heliotrope and lily of the valley develop ozone in closed vessels. Flowers destitute of perfume do not develop it, and those which have but slight perfume develop it only in small quantities. As a corollary from these facts, the professor recommends the use of flowers in marshy districts, and in places infested with animal emanations, as the powerful oxidizing influence of ozone may destroy them. The inhabitants of such regions should surround their houses with beds of the most odorous flowers.

Salt for Pear-Trees.—My father found two young pear-trees in a fence corner, which he took home, and planted in the yard. They grew very nicely and commenced to bear some five or six years ago. The variety is one which begins to ripen the last week in September. The trees were every year full of pears, but more than one-half would drop off before they were ripe. In the spring of 1874 I took fish and pork pickle and sprinkled five bucketsful around the two trees, to a distance of about ten feet all around, and the result was that my trees have been since so full of fruit that the limbs nearly broke down. I don't believe that one hundred pears fell off before they were ripe. I think salt and wood ashes are the best fertilizers for pear-trees that we can get.—D. N. Kern, in Practical Farmer.

To Preserve Fence Posts.—Some one who has tried it says: "I found many years ago that wood could be made to last longer than iron in ground, but thought the process so simple and inexpensive that it was not worth while making any stir about it. I would as soon have poplar hass-wood or quaking ash as any other kind of timber for fence posts. After having been set seven years they were as sound when they were taken out as when they were first put in the ground. Time and weather seem to have no effect on them. The posts can be prepared for less than two cents apiece. This is the receipt: Take boiled linseed oil and stir it in pulverized charcoal to the consisteney of paint. Put a coat of this over the timber, and there is not a man who will live to see it rot."

Orders for all kinds of Merchandise and Manufactured Goods filled at the lowest market rates; and any information needed regarding prices or other matters connected with the trade promptly furnished.

Our office in the entrance to the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 20 and 22 West Fourth street, where its many members are constantly passing, gives us the best of facilities for exhibiting samples of Grain, Cotton and Manufactured Articles, which advantage we offer to those desiring our services.

From the Cincinnati Price Current, March 13, 1869.

"We desire to call the attention of merchants in the interior to the card of Messrs. H. D. Rogers & Co., which is published in another column. This firm proposes introducing a new business, namely: filling orders for any kind of Merchandise or Manufactured Goods to be found in this market, charging only a small commission, thus enabling country merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and indeed all classes, to procure any article they may need at the lowest cash price, without incurring the expenses of coming to the city. And as Mr. Rogers is thoroughly conversant with the city trade in all its departments, and one whose integrity and fidelity to the interests of his customers are of the highest order, no doubts need be entertained by those sending their orders to this firm that they will be faithfully attended to."

Quotations furnished on application. Shippers and others forwarding samples will have their value ascertained, and an offer made, if practicable.

With an experience of twenty years in merchandising in this city, we can offer the best facilities and references. jy22 3m

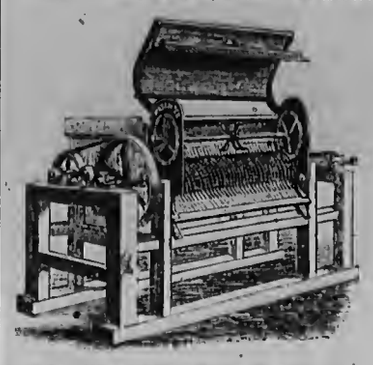
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



This Gin has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Centenary Female College,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

The Thirty-Fifth Session opens OCTOBER 4, 1875. Healthiest location in the South; superior advantages; thorough teaching; accomplished and experienced Faculty; imposing and commodious buildings; accessible to all points; elegant accommodation for pupils, and the cheapest first-class Institution in the South. Charges greatly reduced. $103.25 for half session. Address au19 1m A. D. McVOY, President.

Wesleyan Female Institute

STAUNTON, VA.,

Will begin its Twenty-sixth annual session SEPTEMBER 20, 1875. Rev. Wm. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three teachers and officers.

Modern Languages taught and spoken in the college by a European teacher. Music by seven professors and teachers.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Those who come here from the South, with feeble constitutions, chills and climatic diseases are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant, lighted by the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

The past session this school was attended by pupils from seventeen different States.

Great economy and simplicity in dress are required. A simple uniform is worn. No unnecessary expense allowed, and none made without express instructions from parents. Strict economy practiced to keep all expenses of pupils within the lowest possible amount.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

"The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music advantages are offered of a very high order."

Terms for Entire Collegiate Year.

Board and tuition in the Collegiate course, including Ancient Languages, $210. Music and other extras moderate.

Scientific.

—Some interesting experiments on the diffusion of gases through the walls of soap bubbles have recenily been described by M. F. Muller, in the Berichte of the Berlin Chemical Society. One of these makes a good lecture experiment. An air-filled bubble, with pipe, is fixed by a support under a bell-jar containing ordinary gas. After half a minute the bubble contains an inflammable mixture of gas and air. To show this, it is taken out and the India rubber tubing, with cock, which closed the pipe, are removed, and a light is applied to the pointed end of the pipe, out of which the gas slowly issues from the contracting bubble. A flame is produced—very small, indeed, but so large that a match may be lighted at it, and thus its existence made more evident. A better effect can be produced with ethyl gas, used in a similar way. The interior of the bell-jar should be moistened previously with water, since the bubbles in that case last longer (over four minutes.) The author also demonstrates Graham's law, showing that the lighter gases pass through the liquid film more quickly than the heavier.

A New Musical Machine.—A remarkable piece of musical machinery has been exhibited in Philadelphia, the invention of a German gentleman, Mr. Schmoele. The apparatus reads notes and plays upon an organ with absolute correctness of time and touch, the only assistance given it by the operator being to feed in the end of a roll of music and start the machinery in motion. In the Schmoele instrument the electric current is endued with a seeming intelligence, and distinguishes the notes in the same way that a blind man does—by feeling. The score is written on a long roll of stout paper by cutting holes through it in the form of squares or parallelograms. The reading instrument, which is about as large as a sewing machine, is provided with a multitude of small brass fingers, each of which is connected by a wire with the pipe of the organ which it operates. The roll of music is fed in over a brass tube. When the fingers rest on the paper no electric current is transmitted, because paper is a non-conductor; but whenever they fall into the holes cut in it they touch the brass below, the current is transmitted, and the sound produced. The length of the note is governed by the length of the slit in the paper. A noiseless bellows machine, run by wind conducted through a pipe from the organ, works the feeding apparatus. To aid in producing orchestral effects, drums, cymbals, bells, etc., are added to the ordinary pipe organ, and operated by electricity in the same manner as the pipes. A greatly increased volume of sound and much richer harmonic combinations can be made by this instrument than it is possible for a single performer to produce upon an organ, in consequence of the fact that the performer has only his ten fingers, while the electrical machine has two hundred, and can strike as many notes at once as desired.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

THE DUBOIS

FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other gins.

The Flange prevents bolls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 10 to 80 SAW STANDS, belt or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. TOULSAN BROTHERS,

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending August 24:

Red river	5
Ouachita river	6
Railroads	38
Texas	4
Total	103

On Saturday the higher grades were scarce and held at extreme rates. Middling sold at 11¼c. Nothing transpired in any other grades that indicated any quotable variation. The sales embraced 314 bales. On Monday the market opened with a better demand for the North, and factors' views being strengthened by an advance of 1-16d. at Liverpool, where the sales were 14,000 bales, while New York was firm for spots, with an improvement in futures, buyers were met by stringent pretensions especially for the better qualities. Middling, with good staple, consequently commanded 14⅛c., or ⅛c. above outside quotations, and could not have been had for less. Other descriptions also exhibited increased firmness, without showing any quotable variation. The business amounted up 580 bales. On Tuesday the inquiry continued fair, but the reported sales were confined to 181 bales. It was rumored that in addition to the above in list of about 200 bales had changed hands, but it appeared that the trade was not consummated. Low middling exhibited increased buoyancy and other descriptions continued steady. In revising our quotations we have advanced some grades ⅛c., as noted above.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1,065 bales, against 413 for the corresponding time last week and 910 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 994,211 bales, against 1,217,453 bales to the same date last year, and the decrease in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 303,506 bales. The decrease by the reports per telegraph is 301,406—3,495,962 against 3,800,368. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 26,461 bales to Great Britain, and a decrease of 10,818 to France, and of 164,319 to other foreign ports. We quote:

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—The President has accepted the sixth section, comprising twenty miles, of the Southern Pacific railroad of California.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—A telegram was received at the Navy Department this morning from Capt. Edward Simpson, commanding the United States steamer, dated Panama, August 26, announcing that the State of Panama has declared war against the government of Colombia. The department immediately issued orders to Rear Admiral Mullaney, commanding the North Atlantic station, to hold all of his available force in readiness to proceed without delay to the Isthmus, if necessary for the protection of American interests there.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 26.—The Bank of California stopped paying checks at 2.45 P. M.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 26, 10 P. M.—The general feeling about town to-day is rather blue. The cashier of the National Gold Bank and Trust Company stated to a gentleman during an interview, this evening, that the bank would open in the morning, but might have to suspend during the day.

Ralston, president of the Bank of California, jumped off Selby's Smelting Works wharf this evening and drowned. The body was recovered.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—Information has been received here, from a prominent officer on the Rio Grande, to the effect that cattle-stealing and murders of peaceable American citizens are still perpetrated by Mexican marauders, and in all probability they will continue, in spite of the forces we can send there, unless we can break up the bands of assassins and thieves on either side of the river, and as far in the interior of Mexico as may be found necessary.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 30.—Yellow fever has disappeared at Barrancas, and no further fears are entertained. The mayor of this city has issued a proclamation, on the recommendation of the Board of Health, removing the quarantine against Pensacola, as that city is perfectly healthy.

FOREIGN.

PANAMA, August 16.—President Garcia Moreno was assassinated in his palace at Quito on the sixth instant. The news caused a great sensation along the coast. He was killed by an officer, Capt. Rayo, whom he had displaced. Rayo first struck the President over the head or shoulders with a machete. He was instantly run through the body by the sentry on duty, who at the same time fired his piece, killing the assassin. Two young men then fired at the President with revolvers. The President fell on his face, mortally wounded, and has since died. The young men escaped.

LONDON, Aug. 24.—A special to the Standard says the Herzegovinan insurgents massacred ninety Turkish prisoners, captured at Marsic. Bands of insurgents are assembling in the mountains of Crete.

Advices from Melbourne state that Com. James J. Goodenough, commanding the British squadron in Australian waters, died on the twentieth by poisoned arrows, in an attack made on his flagship, the corvette Pearl, by the natives of Carlisle Bay, and, although every effort was made to counteract its effects, the poison proved fatal. One seaman was killed and three wounded.

TORONTO, ONT., Aug. 24.—Willis Nazery, bishop of the British Methodist Episcopal Church in Canada, died on Sunday last.

ROME, Aug. 26.—The wife of Garibaldi is dead.

PERPIGNAN, August 27.—Seo de Urgel has capitulated. The Alfonsist army occupied the forts this morning. The garrison were made prisoners of war and were taken to Puigcerda. The Bishop of Seo de Urgel was also taken to Puigcerda as a prisoner of war.

MALTA, Aug. 27.—The Hartford is here, homeward bound. The difficulty between the American consul and Tripolitans was settled on Thursday. An apology was made by order of the Porte. The affair originated in some seamen entering the consul's garden for matches.

RAGUSA, Aug. 28.—Mehemet Ali has been appointed commander-in-chief of the Turkish forces in Herzegovina and Bosnia. He arrived here yesterday, on the way to Serajaro, to assume command. Serve Pascha, extraordinary commissioner of the Porte, passed here yesterday on the steamer going to Kleck.

The steamer also carried troops and artillery. The representatives of foreign powers will meet in Mostari and attempt pacification.

BELGRADE, Aug. 28.—In consequence of the forcible occupation by the Turks of the Bakova Convent, near the Servian frontier, the inhabitants of the district of Novarosch have revolted, and the chief town of Novarosch is in flames.

HAVANA, Aug. 28.—Another revolution has begun in San Domingo. Ex-President Baez has been proclaimed President by the revolutionists. The cities of Santo Domingo and Puerto Plato remain loyal to President Gonzales.

LONDON, Aug. 30.—A dispatch to the Daily News says the Herzegovinian insurgents reject the advice of European powers to suspend hostilities. They demand the independence of Bosnia.

A special dispatch to the Daily News from Bourg La Dame says the formal surrender of Seo do Urgol occurred on Friday. The citadel was handed over to the Alfonsists on Saturday. Fifty Carlists were killed and one hundred wounded during the siege. Eight hundred prisoners were taken, including three hundred officers. Gen. Jovellar has asked permission to return to Cuba, as he considers his presence here no longer necessary.

BERLIN, August 30.—The steady growth of the Herzegovinian rebellion may be inferred from the following passage in the Montenegrin official journal: "The insurrection is fast assuming formidable dimensions. Symptoms of serious designs multiply. Men are yearning for war, and oily-tongued diplomacy is impotent to prevent them. This time the insurrection is sure to result in emancipation. Not the rulers, but the nations will decide what is to be done. If the rebellion becomes general, Servia and Montenegro will not be idle spectators. Now or never!"

An Appeal.

Don't skip this article because of its ominous title. It is in behalf of neither "home" nor "foreign missions," "ministerial education," "church extension," "sustentation," nor "religious publication" that your sympathy and aid is to be invoked. These and many kindred interests among the organized Christian charities of the day rest upon the Bible as their foundation, and hence in advocating the circulation of that blessed book we call your attention to the very heart of all Christian organizations, whence pulsates the blood by which they are vitalized and kept vigorous.

Are all the readers of this journal aware that there is domiciled in New Orleans a society whose constituency embraces the entire State of Louisiana and the southern half of Mississippi, and whose special and sole object is to circulate the Scriptures through every parish and county within the limits indicated? Whether denied or acknowledged, every Christian in this section of the Southwest has an interest and responsibility in the existence and work of this society.

In the directory of the Southwestern Bible Society are representatives of the Presbyterian, the Methodist, the Episcopal and Baptist churches, and in each of these denominations, within the limits of our field, we suppose that there are thousands of professed friends of the Bible cause.

If, however, we may test this supposition by the touch-stone of genuine Christianity—"by their fruits ye shall know them"—our estimate of the number of friends we may certainly count upon proves to be but a very small proportion of the aggregate communions of these four churches.

Annually we send to every clergyman in our territory, whose address we can obtain, a copy of our report, and in February last we supplemented the report with a special circular letter, in which we emphasized this fact:

We have Bibles in abundance, but to maintain the colporteurs, by whom they are to be carried to the needy thousands, we must rely entirely upon the contributions of our Christian brethren.

Another year of our history is soon to close, yet up to this date, and notwithstanding our frequent and specially urgent appeals, we have not received $100 from our entire field, nor have we any reason to believe that a dozen churches in all Louisiana and southern Mississippi, including our home churches in New Orleans, take even an annual collection for the support of this their own Bible society.

Now and then some brother wakes up to the importance of the work, which it is our special province to prosecute, sufficiently to ask: "Why don't the Southwestern Bible Society do more work? All around us the American Bible Society is actively engaged, while we (he don't mean we, but they,) who have one of the most destitute fields to supply, are really doing less than almost any other section of our country for the circulation of God's word." The answer to such criticism is found in Exodus v, 16: "There is no straw (money) given unto thy servants, and they say unto us: Make bricks (distribute Bibles,) and behold thy servants are beaten (in fashion as above,) but the fault is in thine own people" (the Christian men and women of Louisiana and southern Mississippi.)

We ask for no fund for salaries of agents or officers, for that account is now reduced to a very small monthly expenditure, that is covered by the rental of our Bible House; but what we do urge you to do is to provide for the constant support of five or six earnest men who, as colporteurs, will work for a salary of $50 per month. Send in to us $3,600 per year—less than five cents annually from each of our nominal constituents—and in a few years every family in all our territory that will receive it will have a copy of the Bible.

Will not every reader of this article see to it that he is guiltless if the reproach of "having a name to live while it is dead" shall justly attach to the Southwestern Bible Society?

Let the "straw" be forthcoming, and we will furnish the "full tale of bricks."

A. H. NELSON,
Cor. Sec. Southwestern Bible Society.

From the Work.

FROM TEXAS.—Mr. Editor: I attended a Cumberland camp meeting last week at Ridgway church, Bastrop county, Texas, and it was such a good and profitable meeting that I think you and your readers would be gratified with a short account of it. Let me premise by saying that this section was, up to 1868 or 1869, one of the "waste places" in Texas—seldom visited by a minister of the gospel. In 1868 Rev. Mr. Strahan, a Cumberland Presbyterian, commenced preaching here in private houses, and then under an arbor. In 1870 he dedicated a neat, comfortable church, out of debt. Now he has a very respectable membership, and during the meeting nineteen more were added to the number. He cannot preach, in a technical sense; is a good exhorter and an excellent pastor, visiting the entire community, talking religiously to everybody, and praying in every family. No wonder he succeeds.

The meeting began August 13, and closed on Sunday night, the twenty-second. From the first night the signs were favorable for a gracious revival, and by Monday night a number were converted. I reached the ground on Tuesday morning, received a cordial welcome, and was requested to preach at eleven and at night. Both services were very interesting. At night there were twenty-eight mourners at the altar, and twenty or more conversions. Such a time of refreshing and power I have never witnessed at any one service in Texas. Convictions were deep and pungent, extorting the cry: "Save, Lord, or I perish!" Conversions were clear and scriptural. Among the converted were three children of a sister who had not walked in eight years. She was lying on a bed in her carriage near the arbor, and as her children were converted they rushed to their mother, shouting: "Glory to God." The scene stirred every Christian heart, and many tears were shed by those unused to weep. Many were on their knees out in the congregation, crying for mercy. It was good to be there.

From this time till the close several were converted every day, the young converts and old members taking an active part at the altar, singing, etc. The venerable Joseph Tally, of the Mobile Conference (his youngest daughter was converted on that memorable Tuesday night,) preached the closing sermon from Revelation xv, 3. It was unctuous and soul-stirring, and the large concourse seemed much moved during its delivery. Seventeen came to the altar. Six ministers, representing three different churches, stood in the altar, and bade farewell to a great many, who promised, by the grace of God, to meet them in heaven, amidst tears and shouts rejoicing in hope of the glory of God. The benediction was pronounced, and the large congregation dispersed at ten P. M. Forty-two were converted. Nineteen joined the Cumberlands, ten the Methodists and six the Baptists.

WINCHESTER, TEXAS, August 24, 1875.

WARRINGTON, PENSACOLA NAVY YARD, FLA.—Mr. Editor: It is with that pleasure which those who have sown in tears experience when they begin to reap the harvest, and find their arms joyously burdened with sheaves, that I write you these lines.

Five months after my arrival here Bro. Joseph Curry dedicated for us the handsomest little church in this part of Florida. Some cost more, doubtless, but none are neater or more beautiful. You cannot conceive the fullness of my joy when, on the dedication night, I received the church from my stewards, and in the solemn stillness of such occasions called it after our dear dead brother—the Hamilton Methodist Episcopal Church South.

My greatest pleasure, though, lies not in the material structure which this people have erected here, but in the spiritual church which God has founded among us. Our entire year has witnessed a growth as substantial as unlooked for. Our week of prayer has but increased our growth, and the end, thank God, is not yet come. Men who have never prayed are praying now; hearts always cold are warm now; souls heretofore careless are waked into life and earnestness. Our new converts are taking up their crosses, and the public prayers of new members are nightly wafted as a sweet savor to God, while to our souls they sound like the music of new-tried harps dedicated to Jehovah's praise. The joyful cry of Simeon rings in my soul: "Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." And as I know that Simeon's joy was that of a soul unmeritedly the recipient of God's favor, so I trust that my happiness is a loss of self in Christ's glory. On whose ever shoulders the burden of this work will rest next year, let him be assured that he will find strong, willing hands to help, and warm, earnest hearts to cover him with a mantle of affection and kindness.

PRESTON NASH.

AUGUST 19, 1875.

OZARK CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: On Saturday before the third Sabbath in August I began the meeting at Mount Zion, and closed on Thursday night following. The church was blessed at the first service, and the meeting increased in interest from service to service till Wednesday night, when an awful solemnity rested upon the whole congregation, and converting power "fell" upon the mourners at the altar, and believers "praised the Lord with joyful lips." During the meeting there were many conversions, and six members added to the church, one of whom came to us from the Missionary Baptist Church at Newton, Dale county, Ala. Bro. Calhoun, of the Newton circuit, the venerable Zaccheus Dowling, Bros. John Dowling, Zinnamon Dowling and Elisha Phillips were with us and rendered valuable aid.

The meeting at Haw Ridge was commenced on Saturday night before the fourth Sabbath of this month, and closed on Tuesday night after. All things considered, the meeting was remarkably good. The church was blessed and greatly unified. There were some conversions, and two accessions to the church. In this meeting I was aided by the Revs. Zaccheus Dowling and Travis Z. Hildreth.

ANGUS DOWLING.

OZARK, ALA., August 26, 1875.

RUTLEDGE CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We have had a gracious revival at this point of the circuit. Bro. A. M. Jones, assisted by Bros. Kelly and Beal, local ministers, commenced a meeting here August 11, which was continued to the twenty-third, being a meeting of twelve days' duration. Nor did the people seem to be tired at its conclusion. The result was that the church was powerfully revived and sinners converted. Seventeen were added to the church. What great miracles God is working all over this land in the conversion of souls! As we fight the battles of our great Captain we hear cheer after cheer rise from every point of the line.

Our finances too, considering the stringent times, are doing finely. Our pastor is receiving good attention in the way of support. Thank the Lord for this other evidence of the genuineness of the work of grace in the hearts of the people! If a man loves Christ he will always take pleasure in doing something for the ministry. Your brother in Christ,

E. Y. MCMORRIES.

RUTLEDGE, ALA., August 23, 1875.

From Vicksburg.

MR. EDITOR: Your editorial on "Seashore Editing" impresses me. It carries me back to boyhood's days. The spreading bay, the distant sail, the school of porpoise, the jumping, scampering mullet, and the like, mentioned by you, turn memory backward, and the man becomes a boy again. I wish I were with you awhile. But here I am, and must remain a "fisher of men," sometimes seeming to cast the net "on the right side of the ship," but inclosing not a multitude of fishes, but a few, which I trust may not be "cast away."

I wanted much to attend the Seashore camp-meeting and help "drag the seine," but could not. My heart was with you. God grant that many "restless wanderers upon life's treacherous waters" may be drawn to the heavenly shore through your annual gatherings upon the lovely bay.

Our District Conference begins here on Thursday morning next, the twenty-sixth instant. Come, and beg Bishop Keener to come with you if he can get respite from other calls. Bishop Paine cannot attend. The political campaign waxes warm.

J. BANCROFT.

VICKSBURG, MISS., August 21, 1875.

The Camp Meeting Near Crystal Springs.

The people moved in, and the public exercises began on Thursday night, August 12. They were continued to Friday morning, the twentieth. The public services were largely attended by attentive hearers. There were four services each day at the stand. The preaching was all good, and useful to edifying, and blessed in the awakening of sinners, the conversion of penitents, the comfort and encouragement of Christians. It was frequently remarked: "I have never heard so much good preaching in so many consecutive sermons." There were twenty-nine sermons preached by eighteen ministers, and each sermon seemed to have a special place and work.

The congregations were large throughout the meeting, and the last night numbered from one thousand five hundred to two thousand persons. Good order obtained about the stand, tents and campus. Nearly all seemed to be interested in the work. Many were convicted of sin, and we were able to count one hundred and forty-three conversions. How many more occurred we cannot, of course, form an idea. Hundreds were at the altar for prayers who were not converted. They were there for a time, but had to leave for homes and business before they had received Christ by faith as their Savior. O that the Spirit may still be with them, and that they may not cease to call on the Lord for his salvation. May they fall in with those who will guide and instruct them, and point them successfully to Jesus, who will save. And what a work is to be done by the church in feeding and guiding the tender lambs—the young converts—that they may grow in grace and ever be found faithful, holding fast the profession of their faith without wavering! Let every pastor and member of the church where those young converts have gone give them special attention—give them the advice and instruction they need, that they may learn how to be Christians in heart, spirit and life, and that they may be so instructed as not to fall a prey to the water proselyters.

One little girl, converted at the meeting, said to her mother: "O mamma, I do want to be a Christian and live right; but I do not know how." That shows the work to be done by the pastors and older members of the church. May we do it. "Teach them," said Jesus, "to observe all things whatsoever I have told you." Teach them how to live every day, how to persevere in the divine life. "Watch over them in love."

We had forty-six Methodist preachers, local and traveling, with us during the meeting. They were good workers. Among them were Bishop Keener, Dr. C. K. Marshall, Dr. J. J. Wheat, Dr. W. H. Watkins, Revs. J. T. Heard, C. B. Galloway, W. B. Lewis, I. B. Robertson, R. D. Norsworthy, Joseph Nicholson, H. F. Johnson and others, who labored with success in the pulpit and altar. We had the singer of the Mississippi Conference, Rev. J. B. K. Smith, with us. What power there is in song, and how he can sing! Many others made sweet melody in songs they sang.

The camp ground is located so as to be easy of access by rail from New Orleans to Jackson, Tenn. (indeed Paducah, Ky., had a representative at the meeting,) and from Vicksburg to Meridian.

These camp meetings become a power for great good in the land. The preaching, the singing, the praying, the exhortation, the tears and cries of penitents, the shouts of the converts and older Christians, make impressions on minds that will never be erased, and that will lead many to seek salvation in days and months after the services are ended. Let us keep them up, then, and try to have more of them.

There were thirty-four tents, and the tenters were hospitable, and made us all feel that we were at home. May they be greatly blessed of the Lord for all they did in getting up and sustaining that meeting.

Some twenty or more lots were laid off by those who wish to have homes there at the next camp meeting. Still there is room for others.

May many meetings be held there, and may that be the birth-place of many thousands of precious, blood-bought souls.

Southern University.

At the meeting of the board of trustees, held July 5-7, 1875, the undersigned were appointed a committee to address the church and the alumni, through the Advocates, on the condition and prospects of the Southern University.

In the discharge of this duty we desire to say frankly that the past year has not been a prosperous one. While the number of students in attendance has been a fair average compared with other institutions in the South, and while their deportment and devotion to study have been above the average, yet the receipts from tuition fees have fallen so far below the expenses as to materially increase the debt heretofore so embarrassing. Besides this, the income from interest on endowment notes has been a mere trifle; while of the collection ordered by the Conference only about $100 has been paid to this date.

We are glad to be able to say to you that the policy whereby the present debt was created has been definitely abandoned. We have adopted a new programme, under which no further indebtedness can accrue. And we feel confident, from statements made and pledges given at our late meeting, that there is a fair prospect of a material reduction of the debt before the close of this year.

The faculty has been reorganized, and is now full. As you will see from the announcement for the next session, they are men whose names give assurance that the high grade of scholarship heretofore established will be maintained.

With this candid statement of our condition, with the brightening prospects and more hopeful future just before us, we earnestly appeal to you, as friends to the university, as friends of sanctified learning, to aid us in making this vital interest of the church a grand success.

We need students. Send us all the young men you can influence. We need money. Send us what you can, if it be but $1 each. And we assure you that when the present burden of debt is removed you will not be called on to lift another

DEATH OF AN OLD CITIZEN.—We notice that Mr. William C. Tompkins, one of our old and prominent citizens, died in Boston, Mass., on the sixteenth of August. He was for many years the head of one of the largest wholesale dry goods houses in this city. We have known him for the past thirty years. He was an upright man, a good citizen, and of unblemished character as a merchant. The New Orleans Price Current says of him:

Mr. Tompkins was a resident of New Orleans for the past thirty-seven years, during which time he occupied a leading position in the mercantile world, and now leaves a name that will long stand a monument to his excellence as a citizen. Charitable to a fault, modest in his bearing, but few really ever knew the extent to which he carried his philanthropy. Many years ago he was elected by the people to the position of alderman, which he filled in a manner that long reflected credit upon him. Declining a renomination, he retired to private life, his large wholesale dry goods business requiring all his attention. As our old readers will remember, the firm was first Charles A. Townsend & Co., then Townsend, Tompkins & Co., subsequently W. C. Tompkins & Co., and then W. C. Tompkins. While sympathizing with the many old patrons of this house in the loss they have sustained by the death of Mr. Tompkins, we will mention that there will be no change in the business, which will go on as usual.

TO THE PREACHERS AND MEMBERS OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH.—Rev. and Dear Brethren: As the Conference season approaches we feel much concern as to the missionary collections. The drafts in aid of our missionaries have been issued and must be met, or our brethren will suffer, the cause be injured, and our church suffer reproach. Let each preacher see to it that a full collection be taken. The assessments are very small, made so because of the stringency of the times; but now that the crops are good, and the prospects encouraging, it would be lamentable if we fall below what we have appropriated. Let every member, young and old, rich and poor, contribute to the cause. Let no charge allow itself to report to the Conference a deficit. Work in time. Do your best, and you will succeed.

THE FISHER.

Sorrow and strife and pain
Have crushed my spirit with relentless hand;
Long have I toiled, O Lord, and wrought in vain,
But still at thy command,

Into the wide blue sea,
Clinging to thine own word, I cast the net;
Thy covenant was made of old with me,
And I will trust thee yet.

Lord, it is hard to stand
Waiting and watching in this silent toil,
While other fishers draw their nets to land
And shout to see their spoil.

My strength fails unawares,
My hands are weak; my sight grows dim with tears;
My soul is burdened with unanswered prayers,
And sick of doubts and fears.

I see, across the deep,
The moon cast down her fetters, silver-bright,
As if to bind the ocean in his deep
With links of living light.

I hear the roll and rush
Of waves that kiss the bosom of the beach,
That soft sea voice that ever seems to hush
The tones of human speech.

A breeze comes sweet and chill
Over the waters, and the night wanes fast;
His promise fails — the net is empty still —
And hope's old dreams are past.

Slow fades the moon and stars,
And in the east the new dawn faintly shines,
Through the dim gray shadows, flecked with pearly bars,
And level silver lines.

But lo! what form is this
Standing beside me on the desolate shore?
I bow my knees his garment's hem to kiss!
Master, I doubt no more.

"Draw in thy net, draw in."
He cries; "behold the straining meshes break!"
Ah, Lord, the spoil I toiled so long to win
Is granted for thy sake!

The rosy day blooms out
Like a full-blossomed flower; the joyous sea
Lifts up its voice; the winds of morning shout:
All glory, God, to thee!

Heaven.

The idea of a heaven—another and better world than this—seems to be congenial to the human mind. It has been generally entertained in every age of the world. The wise men of ancient times, who possessed nothing but the light of nature to direct them, cherished the ennobling idea of a hereafter, an immortal existence. Even the untutored savage flatters himself with the pleasing prospect of being one day transported into a happier region, and anticipates the pleasure which he will there enjoy in the company of his fathers. All feel within themselves the "pleasing hope, the fond desire, the longing after immortality." Nature has given to all her children some conceptions of immortality. But still it must be acknowledged that her information is far from proving satisfactory; hence we find that the most eminent sages of the heathen world, even while desiring and hoping for such a state, confessed themselves unable to demonstrate its existence; and as they, with longing eyes, looked forward for such a world, a thick cloud, impenetrable by unassisted reason, intercepted their view.

From this state of painful anxiety we in this gospel land are happily relieved. To us immortal life is clearly revealed—more clearly than even to the ancient worthies, to whom God graciously revealed himself and committed his oracles. During the dispensation under which they lived the prospect of a better world was afforded them, but by dark and distant illusions. The city of God, the heavenly Jerusalem, was seen only from afar; its glory was obscured by intervening shades. But by the gospel these shades are dispelled—the sun of righteousness has arisen, and heaven, with all its glory, opens to our vision. There in that mansioned city, by the telescope of faith, we behold the ransomed ones, adorned with all holiness, filled with all happiness, and robed with all the honor that can be conferred upon their nature. Here they were the light of the world; yet this is not worthy to be named when we behold them "shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," where their joy shall be without alloy, their happiness full, and its duration eternal. With such, "old things have passed away," and all things are new, grand and sublime.

We all perceive, in some measure, the charms of novelty, and the delight which arises from the contemplation of objects new, grand and beautiful. Let us, then, place before our imagination the pleasing sensations we shall experience, the high transports we shall feel, when heaven, with all its glory, shall be unfolded to our view—when the glory of the celestial paradise shall beam upon our astonished vision. Such felicity, with a well-grounded hope of heaven and happiness, even in the prospective, is well calculated to enlarge the mind, and fill it with emotions it cannot express. That our intellectual powers in a future state shall continue to enlarge is not a matter of mere conjecture. Experience, reason and revelation combine in establishing the fact.

Experience teaches us that activity is essential to a well-ordered mind, and necessary for true enjoyment. Reason tells us that the acquisition of knowledge, particularly that which has reference to the works of the Almighty, is the noblest exercise in which the powers of the mind can be employed, and the source of the highest and most refined enjoyment of which an intellectual being is capable. Revelation assures us that "now," while on earth, "we see through a glass darkly; but then (in heaven) face to face. Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as I am also known."

O blissful perfection! Amazing exaltation! While those of the world fatigue themselves in search after folly, O! let us who have named the name of Christ expatiate in the fields of wisdom, explore the vast regions of infinite beauty, behold the manifestations of celestial majesty, lose ourselves in the depths of gratitude unutterable, and abound in the knowledge and love of God, and thus in time obtain a foretaste of that heaven prepared for all who love and look for the second appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. W. SPILLMAN.

Holy Scripture Explained by Eastern Customs.

In the Bible there are many allusions which seem strange, and sometimes meaningless to the ordinary reader. We intend in this paper to examine a few which are explained by Eastern customs. In Ecclesiastes xi, 1 we read: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days." This is evidently an allusion to the sowing of grain in Egypt. The want of rain in Egypt is supplied by the inundation of the Nile, which takes place at certain seasons. The whole country would soon become an uninhabitable desert if it were not for this stream. By natural, assisted by artificial means, it flows over all the land, and causes great fertility, so much so that in ancient times Egypt was reckoned the granary of the world, and is said to have maintained eight millions of inhabitants. When the overflow is at a particular depth those who have rice or other grain to sow go out in boats, and literally cast their bread upon the waters. They scatter their grain on this side and that, among the ripples upon the surface, as the boat moves slowly forward, and it sinks out of sight. But after "many days," when the water has subsided, the land is found to be covered thickly with little green blades like grass, the promise is fulfilled—the bread is found again.

"The psalmist," remarks a writer, "uses a remarkable expression when he says: 'They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.'" A late friend of mine, who long resided in China, wrote to me thus: "Here the rice is sown at the close of the winter months, when the weather is cold, damp and unwholesome. The sower is obliged to tread upon soil that is covered, as well as completely saturated, with water, amidst a vapor arising from the manure and the marshy character of the spot, which is reckoned by the Chinese themselves as very unhealthy. If there is a motto better suited to such sowing than any other, while the state of the atmosphere is bleak and cloudy, and the aspect of all surrounding nature is barren and desolate, it is: 'They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.'"

In the last chapter of Ecclesiastes is another sentence, which may not inappropriately be explained here: "When the sound of the grinding is low." The sound of grinding is to be heard in many places in the East at an early hour every morning. The wheaten bread of the Orientals becomes tasteless after a few hours. They are forced, therefore, to bake every day, and no more is ground daily than is wanted for the baking. The mill in most common use consists of two round stones, each about two feet in diameter, and six inches high. The under one, or "nether millstone" (Job xli, 24,) is immovable, and is somewhat lower around the edge than in the center—that is, it is slightly convex on the top. The upper one is just the reverse, being concave on the bottom, or thicker at the circumference, so as to fit pretty closely on the other. In the center there is a hole, and above this a funnel or hopper, into which the grain is poured, and thus it runs in between the stones, and is broken by them into meal, which falls over the edge upon a board. On the top of the other stone is an upright peg, or sometimes two handles, by means of which it is turned round. Women are generally employed at the process. Dr. Andrew Thomson, in his book on the Holy Land, gives the following description: "Listening," he says, "we heard a sound from one of the houses, which we guessed to be that of a hand-mill, on which corn was being ground for the afternoon meal. We entered, after having used the ceremony of knocking more than once, and found a young woman seated on the earthen floor, and busily at work with her mill. She showed no sign of alarm at the rather sudden apparition, but, interpreting our wishes, took off the upper circular stone, showed us the iron pivot in the lower stone on which it revolved, and also the hollow slant by which the meal escaped after it was ground. As we were examining it, and remarking to our friends on its close resemblance to the Highland querns preserved in some of our antiquarian museums at home, a second girl entered, and, sitting down on the opposite side, and laying hold of the well-worn handle, the little mill went round more rapidly and merrily than ever."

"Mine horn is exalted in the Lord." This curious expression, used by Hannah in her song of thanksgiving, is undoubtedly an allusion to a custom among the Druse women of Mount Lebanon, who "exalt" or set upright the silver horn which they wear for ornament on their heads when a child is born to them. This horn is hollow, and about four or five inches in diameter at the root. It is generally worn rising obliquely from the forehead, but in all cases the veil falls over it and conceals the face. As to have children in the East is an honor to the woman, the upright horn is a fitting emblem of all honor, glory and power, and it is often employed in the Old Testament in this sense. The horn also being the chief defense and strength of many beasts, to break or cut off the horn of a king or people is to abridge or destroy their power; while, on the other hand, to raise or exalt the horn is to establish or increase power and prosperity.

"Who shall deliver me from the body of this death?"—Romans vii, 24. The exclamation was St. Paul's. Perhaps he had seen a horrible punishment which probably suggested the simile. At any rate, it must have been known to those who composed his audience, and would present to them the best picture of the dreadful state of man in sinfulness. A dead body was sometimes chained to a condemned person, who was then left to starve or eat the flesh of the loathsome burden, but in either case to die. Virgil tells us of Mezentius, King of Agylline, or Cere, one of the twelve towns of Etruria at the time Æneas landed in Italy, a ferocious monster, who wantonly inflicted upon his hapless subjects such savage punishments for imaginary crimes:

"The living and the dead, at his command,
Were coupled face to face, and hand to hand:
Till, choked with stench, in loath'd embraces tied,
The lingering wretches pined away and died."

E. Thorp, in Day of Rest.

Clear Lines.

Religion has of late suffered much at the hands of her friends. From the lunar center of lax preaching and easy practice there has burst forth an eruption of hideous criminations and sad disclosures that has darkened the air of Christendom. But with the wrong comes the retribution, and out of it a voice of warning. The long-drawn horror of the thing has passed; but surely the moral significance of it ought not to be lightly passed over; for it cannot be that the providence of God has allowed all this without intending that the Christian world should learn by it some practical lessons of the very gravest importance.

It is time to draw a clear line between truth and error. The gospel claims to be a supernatural religion. We want no preachers in gospel pulpits to proclaim merely the religion of nature. We are weary of hearing of a God who is only an exaggerated man, of repentance which is but outward reformation, of atonement which is only at-one-ment, of love without law or law without penalty, and the whole "gospel of sentiment and gush." We need clear, masculine truth. No more Delphic oracles, studied ambiguities or pleasant platitudes. No more alternate streaks of orthodoxy and of heresy. The religious world has seen enough of this tree and its fruits.

There is a call for a clear line between the church and the world. The church is the solemn union of accredited believers, covenanting with Christ and with each other. It is composed of God's "peculiar people." Let the line be drawn and recognized and held. The church is not a mass meeting for all comers, nor a chance gathering where men drop in and drop out simply by enrolling and "dropping" their names at pleasure. It has its duties and its covenant, and its solemn church feasts, as such, for church members, and not for "the members of no church at all." It has its special bonds of union and communion.

There is a call for a clear line of Christian morality and propriety. The moral sentiment of the community has been somewhat confused of late. Many inevitable changes of relationship and modes of living have rendered necessary some readjustment in methods of activity and enjoyment. But amid all these changes there are certain unmistakable moral tendencies, drifts and proprieties in our associations and our pleasures, not difficult to recognize. And especially in the intercourse of men and women there are certain reserves and refinements which are the blossom of ages of Christianity. Much has been done within a generation to obscure the landmarks of Christian morality in common life. Much more has been done lately by a set of disgusting people of both sexes, called "reformers," to tear away the veil of Christian decency and modesty from social life and conversation. At last, it would seem, they are going to their own places, and Christian people find themselves compelled to turn back to some of the old paths of principle and propriety. God, with as much mercy as rigor, is enforcing reform, and even the devil, having overshot his mark, is driving them to it.

It is time to draw the line between a religious and a non-religious life. Where there is a clear, heaven-wide, inward difference of character, must there not be some distinct and prevailing outward difference of life—in habitual associations, spirit, aims, interests, methods, pleasures, amusements? Will it not show itself in its choice of intimate friends, in its general line of intercourse, its habits of social and domestic life, its style of expenditure, its relation to indulgencies and pleasures proved to be of questionable character, in its Sunday reading and habits, and a multitude of things not prescribed by law, but dictated by the spirit of Christ? And is not this a sphere of piety in which the present generation has witnessed a wonderful mixture, confusion and obliteration?—The Advance.

Paul's Thorn in the Flesh.

Many persons, I find, have never seen Dr. Brown's most ingenious interpretation of this Scripture puzzle. Opinions upon it have been very various, and some not peculiarly honorable to the great apostle. This Scotch physician sees many a hint of suffering eyes in Paul's letters. The first is the utter blindness, caused by lightning on his way to Damascus, which lasted some days, and was only relieved by the aid of Ananias, "when there fell from his eyes as it had been scales." The second is the blunder of Paul's not recognizing the high priest, in Acts xxiii, when he says, "I wist not that it was the high priest," though his dress was so distinctive. Third, would be his letter to the Galatians: "I bear you record that you would have plucked out your own eyes and given them unto me," immediately after the declaration that he had preached the gospel unto them through infirmity of the flesh. This connection between his infirmity and the aid afforded by their eyesight is so direct it is a wonder their relation to each other has not been suspected before. Then he states that he bears in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, which would suit admirably to the disabling effect of his conversion when Jesus addressed him a personal remonstrance. Were his eyesight still suffering, this would remind him perpetually of the day when he was struck down on his persecuting career by blindness. Lastly, he calls the Galatian church to see how large a letter he had written with his own hand; yet the epistle was one of his shortest, and it could only have surprised them by being his own handwriting—not by its size—he being the only apostle whose impaired vision obliged him to employ an amanuensis.

These curious suggestions are not enough for a demonstration, but they are all we shall ever get, and they go a great way in making clear what had been entirely dark before. His recognition of the trial as a wholesome discipline is a lesson of patience to us under those burdens which we all have to bear, especially in growing years.

THE Nation has the following in regard to recent Hebrew literature:

Although Hebrew ceased to be a living language about two thousand years ago, Hebrew literature did not come to an end with the Old Testament. On the contrary, there grew up among the Jews—"the people of the book," as the Koran styles them—an immensely rich post-biblical literature; and even at the present time many Hebrew books are still written and published, particularly in eastern Europe. In America, thus far, only one Hebrew work has been produced, viz.: "Aluey Yehoshu'a" (a commentary on a tractate of the Mishnah, called Aboth,) by Joshua Falk, which was printed in New York in 1860. It is possible that some other Hebrew authors may have come over to this country; but, if so, we believe none of them found enough stimulus in the American atmosphere to continue his literary labors. We can at this moment call to mind only one Hebrew author of note who immigrated to the United States, namely, P. M. Heilprin (misspelled Heilpern in Furst's "Bibliotheca Judaica" and the catalogue of Zeduer and Roest,) who died January 30, 1863, in Washington city. Two works from his pen, of considerable interest ("Techuboth Beanshey Aven" and "Eben Bohan,") were published in Frankfort-on-the-Maine in 1845 and 1846 respectively. During the past two hundred years much has been done toward founding and furthering the science of Hebrew bibliography. We mention first, as among the fathers of this branch of learning, two Christian scholars, Bartolocci and Wolf. Of Jews who labored with great success in this field, Shabthai Bass, Azulai, Zunz, Steinschneider, Furst and Zender deserve especial acknowledgment and praise. With these eminent Hebrew bibliographers must be classed Mr. M. Roest, the compiler of the "Catalog der Hebraica und Judaica aus der L. Rosenthalschen Bibliothek" (Amsterdam, 1875.)

ICEBERGS IN THE ANTARCTIC SEAS.—Those who visit the Antarctic seas after having been in the Arctic, are greatly disappointed in the form of the icebergs; for while those of the north assume every fantastic shape that fancy can conceive, the southern ones are nearly table-topped lumps of ice, precisely the same in form as on the day they parted from their parent glacier; these more resemble huge Twelfth-cakes divested of their ornaments than anything else. In the warmer northern seas icebergs melt more quickly, and assume far more picturesque appearances; but in the Southern ocean the temperature of the water through which the icebergs drift is below the freezing-point of fresh water, and therefore insufficient in heat to melt the ice. It is only after they have moved a considerable way northward that the regularity of their shape begins to be interfered with. As the berg travels from the pole it first reaches a latitude where the summer sun has the power of heating the surface-water slightly above the freezing-point without affecting that immediately below it; this has the effect of melting a notch in the side of the berg all round it, and just above the sea level; but this notch was not observed to extend into the ice in any case more than about thirty feet. As the warm water becomes still warmer as the berg floats further north, it has naturally greater power, and deep caves or caverns are formed, which offer increased facilities for wave-washing the larger they become, until, the mass being weakened, large pieces become detached. As this alters the center of gravity, the berg lurches over, and either forms a slope, or a long spur or tongue rises; and thus the work of destruction proceeds until the form of the berg is altogether changed, and that part which formed the tongue may become its topmost pinnacle. Hence the greater variety of form in the berg seen by ships passing south on an arc of the great circle in comparatively low latitudes. The portions that break away from the berg are termed calves, and they are often of far greater danger to shipping than the bergs themselves, for the latter have a reflected light that render them visible at a little distance on the darkest night, whereas the calf, although it may be several hundred tons in weight, is not perceptible, or, if so, may readily be mistaken for the top of a sea breaking.—Chambers' Journal.

Lot's Wife.

"Remember Lot's wife." Remember her fate. With the destruction of Sodom she was destroyed. Suddenly, in the instant of her looking back—awfully, eternally—her sin found her out.

And now, my brethren, I ask: Are any of you still in the devoted city? In and of the world which God hath cursed, and concerning which he hath said: Go forth—tarry not! Oh, let me beseech you, escape for your lives. Let nothing keep you. Even now the merciful Savior may be calling in his appliances of grace—even now the flame may be casting its crest over your devoted heads, and you must dwell within its everlasting burnings. The time draws on when you must either be in Christ, or lost to him forever. This is your day of grace. God grant you may not wail endlessly, fruitlessly, over its remembrance. Hasten, brethren—flee to the sinner's only refuge—flee to that side, wounded, pierced, cleft, to take you in. If you live and die rejecting Christ, he says your guilt is greater than that of Sodom and Gomorrah, and your destruction will be a more fearful and awful one.

And you who have come out, and are making your way to the city of refuge, persevere, seek this last, best grace—the perseverance that God crowns. Onward—forward—upward—waver not—tamper not with the smallest sin. You have begun in the spirit—remember, you may end in the flesh. You may find it hard to keep pressing onward—into a higher, keener, loftier region—hard to be crucifying the flesh with all its affections and lusts, and all this for a reward unseen—hard to bear up when doubts and fears are many and trials heavy, and the memory of sin harrowing and consolations small; but still onward. To go back is perdition. Remember that Christ's finger points to this pillar of salt, hard by the gate of Zoar. The devil will follow you up to the gate—the flesh will rebel. You have need to watch and fast and pray—pray that God will not suffer you to fall from him—for any desires of your own—for any revilings of men—for any fear of death—to fall from him. Remember that not angels only, but he speedeth you on your way. He goeth with you—before you—in you. Onward still, and you shall come up to the mountain in the strength of him who fasted and was tempted, and was more than conqueror. Simon, Simon—satan hath desired to have thee, that he may sift thee as wheat; but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. Here is our peril and our safeguard. And if ever your hearts faint, and your resolves waver, and your eyes wander, and your feet go near to falling, then, when you are dejected and tempted, and scarce able to stand, appeal to his human sympathy. And to sustain the vigor of your appeal, think on this lenten lesson:

"Once gain the mountain-top, and thou art free;
Till then, who rest, presume; who turn to look are lost."

Remember Lot's wife—how, after all those years of God's leadings, she perished at the very door of safety—how she looked back once, and never looked forward again.—From a Sermon in the Literary Churchman.

BLIND MULES.—One day, as I was passing a Pennsylvania coal mine, I saw a small field full of mules. The boy who was with me said:

"These are the mules that work all the week down in the mine, but Sunday they have to come up into the light, or else in a little while they go blind."

I never hear a word against keeping the Sabbath day holy but that I remember the mules. They could not have kept their eyesight by saying, "The better the day the better the deed," and continuing to work; nor by quitting work, but remaining down in the mine to spend the Sabbath in sleep or recreation. And who would be stupid enough to go to those mules in the field and say: "You big-eared fools, what are you winking and blinking around here for? Have all days alike."

And so, when I see a heaven-born soul buried in cares, thoughts and feelings of this dark and blackening world for six days, and on the seventh doing anything whatever except bringing that soul out where the light of God's truth and love can shine into it bright and straight from heaven, I say to myself: "Poor mule! He'll soon go blind."—Christian at Work.

OBITUARIES.

CAPTAIN GEORGE BARNES died July 21, 1875, at his residence in Warren county, Miss., aged forty-five years. He was born in Claiborne county, Miss., where he lived until his union in holy wedlock with Miss Louisa Nailor, in 1851. He moved to this county in 1852, where he spent the remainder of his life in great usefulness to the church, to his neighborhood and to his country. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1857, and lived a consistent Christian from that time to his death, never allowing anything to interfere with his duties to his church, and was always among the first to assist the poor and afflicted. Indeed the church, the lodge, the grange and the country have sustained an irreparable loss.

Having heard the call of his Master, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest," he has gone to realize the fulfillment of that promise, not in part, but in whole, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary be at rest"—"the rest that remaineth to the people of God." Followed by a long procession of friends and acquaintances, he was conducted to the family burying ground at Asbury, where the last tribute of respect was paid to him by the several societies of which he was a member; the honors of the church by the funeral services, conducted by the Rev. Josiah Bancroft, of Vicksburg; by the Grangers in the name of the Cincinnati Grange, and by the Masons.

He was a kind husband, a devoted father and a warm friend. May our Lord and Master comfort and sustain the bereaved family in their sad affliction, and enable them to live a life of holiness, and be prepared to meet their loved one, and forever join in praise to the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, where partings will be no more. P. C.

BRO. JOSHUA B. GRACE died at his residence in Alienton, Wilcox county, Ala., July 12, 1875. He was born in Hancock county, Ga., May 9, 1802.

Bro. Grace was a great sufferer for over five months, having been thrown by his horse against a fence, breaking both jaw bones, one rib, and his leg near the hip joint, which, by some oversight, was never discovered until it was too late to set it. He suffered as few men ever suffer. His sufferings, however, were borne by him with a fortitude which surprised many. For several weeks before he died he seemed to have no fears of death.

Two or three weeks before his death I visited him, and he said to me: "Bro. Purifoy, I am going to die. I do not care for that, for there is nothing here that I wish to live for but my wife." But he said he knew that God would take care of her.

On the first Sunday in June Bro. Ellis administered to him the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, at which time he was made happy and rejoiced. A few days before he died his wife asked him if all was right between him and God, and he said: "Yes;" and the day before he died she asked him again if all was right with him, and he answered: "All right, all right." In his death the church has sustained a serious loss. Financially he was a strong support. His house was always the Methodist preacher's home.

A. R. A. PURIFOY.

THE following preamble and resolutions, as a suitable tribute of respect to the memory of ABRAHAM STAFFORD, were drafted and presented by Thomas W. Adams, and adopted by the third Quarterly Conference of Franklinton circuit, Summit district, Mississippi Conference, July 10, 1875:

Whereas, Almighty God has seen fit, in his inscrutable providence, to remove from our communion our beloved Bro. Stafford, transferring him from our fellowship to that to be held inviolable with the "spirits of just men made perfect;" therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our highly esteemed brother the church, the community and his family have sustained an irreparable loss—the church a zealous advocate, an efficient member and a faithful steward; the community a kind neighbor, and his family a loving husband and doting father.

Resolved, That his godly walk and conversation in health, and the sweetness of temper and Christian fortitude with which he patiently withstood the distressing ravages of disease, be ever held up by us for imitation, so that when our summons shall have been issued we may have his cordial greetings upon the threshold of our Father's house.

Resolved, That we tender our condolence to the bereaved family, assuring them that we believe their loss to be his heavenly gain.

ROBERT E. L. PRICE, youngest son of Fountain and Elizabeth Price, was born in Rapides parish, December 30, 1864, and died in Catahoula parish, La., June 15, 1875.

A paralytic from his infancy, little Robert has been released from his afflicted condition by Providence, who is "too wise to err, too good to be unkind." Prevented on earth from mingling with his companions in their childish activities, he now enjoys the companionship of angels and the delightful employments of paradise. S. H. S.

DR. SEELYE says: "There are twice as many converts to Christianity in India to-day as in the whole world at the end of the first century. After the first thousand years there were only 20 versions of the Bible; now there are 274. The first Bible society was formed in England in 1804; now there are multitudes of them, and they have printed and circulated 31,000,000 copies. In the room where Voltaire wrote his boasts that Christianity would not see the nineteenth century a Bible depository is established. Many times more Bibles are circulated and read in the nineteenth century than in all the centuries before. The history of Madagascar (1826 to 1834) is an epitome of Christianity in the first century. When the missionaries returned, after banishment, they found 5,000 Christians as the result of Bible-reading, who had remained steadfast in spite of appalling persecutions."

—During the five years from 1869 to 1874 the Presbyterian Church in Oregon has grown four hundred per cent, in number, and contributions increased.

A PROMINENT business man of London has bought the Victoria Theater, and intends to fit it up for religious work.

CHASTENING.

BY J. D. BURNS.

O thou, whose sacred feet have trod
The thorny path of woe,
Forbid that I should slight the rod
Or faint beneath the blow.

My spirit to its chastening stroke
I meekly would resign,
Nor murmur at the heaviest yoke
That tells me I am thine.

Give me the spirit of thy trust,
To suffer as a son—
To say, though lying in the dust:
My Father's will be done!

I know that trial works for ends
Too high for sense to trace—
That oft in dark affliction sends
Some embassy of grace.

May none depart till I have gained
The blessing which it bears,
And learned, though late, I entertained
An angel unawares.

So shall I bless the hour that sent
The mercy of the rod,
And build an altar by the tent
Where I have met with God.

The Advantage of General Culture.

A series of papers is in course of publication in Blackwood, said to be written by Mr. W. W. Story, and entitled "Conversations in a Studio." From one of the papers of the series we take the following:

Belton.—It would be a charming power to be able to carry one's library in one's mind! I envy men with large memories. Still, nothing is utterly lost; and I comfort myself with thinking that even what has flowed away has at least lent its color to my thoughts, and deepened the channel through which it passed. I hope so, at least. That is the kind of riches I envy. What one is within, and what one has educated himself to do and think and feel, that is truly his, and no one can take it from him. Nor can he himself lose it, or willfully throw it away. But wealth and goods are not ours. They do not really belong to us, but may be added or taken away, and leave us what we were. They may be squandered or stolen or lost. But one's mind and one's memory cannot be pilfered like a chest of coin. What we possess in our mind is ours forever till the mind itself decays.

Mallett.—When old B—— (whose hand was as tight as his morals were loose, and whose life had been devoted almost exclusively to money-getting) died at a ripe old age, somebody asked Ortis what he had left. "Everything," said Ortis; "he has taken nothing with him."

Belton.—Precisely; nothing is truly ours which we must leave behind.

Mallett.—The struggle of the world, the decreased value of money, the crowding of professions and trades at the present day, the strenuous competition for place and wealth, create specialties; and few men now are completely developed; they are rather hands, feet, head, than whole men. A general culture is rare, while a special faculty is trained to the utmost. All the professions and trades are divided and subdivided, and each man has to perfect himself in his department. There is thus a great particular gain to set off against a general loss. In art this is seen almost as much as in law; for it seems to me that culture and a large education are almost necessary to create a great artist. In the ancient days, as well as at the period of the Renaissance, the great artists were accomplished in various branches of art, and did not confine themselves to one. Phidias, for example, was a painter, an engraver, a worker in embossed figures, a sculptor in brass, gold and ivory, and a musician, if not an architect. The architects of the Parthenon, Ictinus and Callicrates were also sculptors of note; and, indeed, most of the artists of those times worked in various branches of art. Leonardo da Vinci was as eminent an engineer as he was a painter. He was also architect, sculptor and musician; and besides being an author and an inventor in mechanics, he was well versed in various branches of science. Michael Angelo was a poet, sculptor, painter and architect, and it is difficult to say in which of the last three he was greatest. Giotto was also accomplished in all these arts. Verrocchio was as excellent a sculptor as painter. Benvenuto Cellini was a soldier, a goldsmith, a sculptor, a poet and an accomplished musician. Salvator Rosa was a painter, a poet and a musician, and his poetry is certainly, at the least, quite as good as his pictures; while what we have of his music is of a large and admirable character. Orcagna was painter, sculptor and architect. Ghiberti, who made the famous doors of the Florentine baptistery, of which Michael Angelo said, with generous exaggeration, they were worthy to be the gates of paradise, was also an architect. But, not to extend the list, in a word, nearly all the artists of any note at this period not only practiced several arts, but distinguished themselves in each; and for myself I cannot but think that the knowledge of all made them stronger in each. They threw into everything they did the full weight of all they knew and were. The breadth of their culture gave refinement and strength to their work.

Belton.—But how could they find time to accomplish themselves in so many arts, if one art requires a lifetime, as you say it does?

Mallett.—There is time enough to do many things, if the person is seriously concentrated in his work, and does not squander his mind and his time by half work. Nothing is so bad as that. There are many persons who think they are working, when in truth they are only dawdling over their work with half attention. There is time enough thrown away every day to enable any one of earnest mind to do more than many a man does with his whole day. All depends upon love of the work on which one is engaged, and in concentration of one's faculties. It is, in my opinion, better to be utterly idle, and lie fallow to influences, than to muddle away hours in half work. Besides, change of labor is rest, and to an active mind more rest than laziness. I have always found in music a more complete refreshment of my mind, after a hard day's work in my studio, than even sleep could give. The faculties and powers and interests are thrown in a different direction, and while one series works the other reposes. After an entire change of occupation one returns with fresh zest and vigor to the work he has left; whereas, if the thoughts are constantly treading the same path, they soon, as it were, wear a rut in the mind, out of which they cannot extricate themselves, and this begets in the end mannerism and self-repetition. Still more, the various arts are but different exercises of correlative powers. They each in turn refresh and enlarge the imaginative and motive powers, and extend their sphere. Each, as it were, is echoed and reflected into the other. The harmonies of color and forms and tones and words are closely related to each other, and but different expressions of merely the same thing. A sculptor's work will be cold if he is not sensitive to color and music; and a painter's work will be loose and vague unless his mind has been trained to the absoluteness of form and outline. Neither can compose well his lines and forms unless he possess that innate sense of balance and harmonious arrangement and modulation which is developed by music.

Birth of the Musquito.

The female musquito lays her eggs upon the water. Finding a suitable place, she supports herself by her two pairs of fore legs, and, crossing the hinder pair like the letter x, she deposits the eggs one after another in the support made by the legs, putting them endwise, side by side, and sticking them firmly together by means of a glutinous secretion which covers them. When the mass is complete it is of the shape of a tiny boat, consisting of from two hundred and fifty to three hundred and fifty eggs, which is set afloat and abandoned to its fate. This little raft floats persistently—it will not sink, nor will hard usage break it up, nor freezing destroy the vitality of the eggs. In a few days the larvæ, as the first stage of the insect is called, are hatched, make their way out of the under side of the egg, and go off in search of food.

The larva is about a third of an inch long. It has a head broader than it is long, and "the part that wiggles" has eight joints. They may be seen in any vessel of rain-water that has been exposed for some days, in the summer, and from their peculiar manner of locomotion they are called "wigglers." The projection near the tail is a tube of hairs through which the wiggler breathes. When not disturbed it rests with its head downward and with this tube at the surface. But on approach of danger it rapidly wriggles itself to the bottom of the vessel. It wriggles through eight to fifteen days of its existence, casting its skin two or three times, and then goes into the pupa state. In this condition it remains with its head downward, and is not quite as lively as before. It moves and tumbles about by means of paddles at the end of its tail. While in this state it takes no food, and the breathing arrangements are quite reversed; for, instead of breathing through the tube at the end of its tail, it is furnished with two tubes at the head through which it takes in air. This state of things lasts from five to ten days, when the skin bursts, and the perfect insect comes forth; this is a most critical period in the life of the insect, and it can only emerge with safety on a very still sunny day. The skin of the pupa bursts open on the back, and the insect first protrudes its head; then its chest gradually follows, and it stands erect in the shell with its legs still confined. The slightest breeze would upset its frail boat, and the insect would be drowned. Indeed but a very small proportion succeed in passing this last transformation in safety. Soon the front pair of legs is extricated and placed on the water. The sun speedily dries the wings, which are gradually expanded, then the legs are drawn and placed on the edge of the pupa case, the antennæ and proboscis are elevated, and the insect then leaves its watery abode and flies away.—Mrs. Charlotte Taylor.

A PRAYER MEETING RECIPE.—We have had a great many, but we shall get none too many good ones:

Go to the meeting with a heart warmed with love to Christ and to Christian brethren. Carry a spirit of prayer with you from your closet, and then you will be sure to have it when you get there. Be ready and prompt to pray and speak. Backwardness and waiting throw a deathly chill over the meeting. Let not the meeting ordinarily exceed one hour. Let brevity be observed in all the services. Long prayers are apt to abound in vain repetitions, and prolonged remarks are often tedious. The model prayer, given by our Lord and Savior, may be easily repeated in half a minute. The prayer of the publican comprises only six words, and still it is very comprehensive. From three to five minutes is usually long enough for any brother to occupy at one time in remarks and prayer. In the closet one may pray an hour or a whole night if he chooses, but in the social circle prayer should be short, specific and fervent. Keep the services free from all friction of unkind feelings and censorious remarks. Let attendance upon these meetings be regular and constant as possible. Be sure to go unless unavoidably prevented. If your faith is weak, go; if your love is chilled, go; if your hope is clouded, go; if peace and joy have failed to permeate your soul, go. Every professed Christian should be sure to go if possible, that the activities of the soul may be stirred up to a holy zeal and drawn out in the service of the Master. If you have for a long time staid away and the Christian armor has got rusty, go. "Prayer makes it bright," burnishes the shield, the sword, the helmet and the breastplate of righteousness. Go if you expect only a few to be there; for if you stay away the number will be still less. Go expecting and longing for the special refreshings of the Holy Spirit, and expecting there to meet Jesus, agreeably to his promise: that where two or three are gathered in his name he will manifest himself in the midst of them. Be sure to go to the prayer meeting, even at the sacrifice of ease and profit in worldly things; and you will find in it a rich reward to your own soul, and see rich blessings bestowed upon your neighbors and upon the church of Christ.—A. W. F.

BOSSUET'S PERSONAL HABITS.—Some of his personal habits were peculiar. From the time he left the court Bossuet made it a habit to get up during the night for devotion and study. He always kept a lamp burning in his room for this purpose, even when traveling; and after a few hours' sleep on first going to bed he used to get up, alike in summer or winter, however sharp the cold might be. Two dress-gowns, and a sort of bag made of bearskin, into which he used to get and draw round his waist, met this difficulty; and, thus armed, the Bishop of Meaux used to say matins and lauds amid the stillness of night, and, that done, he went to his literary work. Everything was put ready over night, and so he betook himself to his books and papers for as long a time as his brain worked clearly and vigorously. When he began to feel exhausted he used to lie down again, and would fall asleep at once. This continued to be his daily custom until, toward the close of his life, Bossuet's physicians insisted on his giving up the work, and thenceforth he went back to bed after he had finished his devotions. These active habits account in some measure for the enormous quantity of work he was able to get through; moreover, he never lost a moment voluntarily, and he used to excuse himself from all the ordinary visits and formalities which so greatly hinder a busy man. Time was not, however, retrenched from prayer. His family was always gathered together for household prayer, and he was diligent in saying office, though he did not make it a rule to attend all the cathedral offices, except on Saturdays, when he generally went to vespers, and he was always there on Sundays, both at high mass, vespers and sermon.—Bossuet and His Contemporaries.

WILL YOU TAKE THE RESPONSIBILITY?—A young man in Virginia had been sadly intemperate. He was a man of great capability, fascination and power, but he had a passion for brandy which nothing could control. Often in his walks a friend remonstrated with him, but in vain; as often in turn would he urge his friend to take the social glass in vain. On one occasion the latter agreed to yield to him, and as they walked up to the bar together the bar-keeper said:

"Gentlemen, what will you have?"

"Wine, sir," was the reply.

The glasses were filled, and the friends stood ready to pledge each other in renewed and eternal friendship, when he paused, and said to his intemperate friend:

"Now, if I drink this glass and become a drunkard, will you take the responsibility?"

The drunkard looked at him with severity and said:

"Set down that glass."

It was set down, and the two walked away without saying a word.

Oh! the drunkard knows the awful consequences of the first glass. Even in his own madness for liquor he is not willing to assume the responsibility of another's becoming a drunkard.

What if the question were put to every liquor dealer, as he asks for his license and pays his money: "Are you willing to assume the responsibility?"

How many would say, if the love of money did not rule them: "Take back the license?"

ABERDEEN SCOTCH.—The Edinburg Review has the following good one: An English clergyman and a Lowland Scotsman visited one of the best schools in Aberdeen. They were strangers, but the master received them civilly, and inquired: "Would you prefer that I should speer these boys, or that you should speer them yourselves?" The English clergyman having ascertained that to speer meant to question, desired the master to proceed. He did so with great success, and the boys answered satisfactorily numerous interrogatories as to the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt. The clergyman then said he would be glad in his turn to speer the boys, and at once began: "How did Pharaoh die?" There was a dead silence. In this dilemma the Lowland gentleman interposed: "I think, sir, the boys are not accustomed to your English accent; let me try what I can make of them." And he inquired in broad Scotch: "Hoo did Phawraoh dee?" Again there was a dead silence, upon which the master said: "I think, gentlemen, you can't speer these boys. I'll show you how to do it." And he proceeded: "Fat cam' to Phawraoh at his hinner end?" The boys with one voice answered: "He was drooned;" and a smart little fellow added: "Ony lassie could hae told you that."

DR. H. M. SCUDDER, in his address before the alumni of Union Theological Seminary, New York, on "American Transcendentalism," took Ralph Waldo Emerson as an exponent. By quotations from Mr. Emerson he undertook to show that the Hindoo and the Emersonian theology are alike in the following particulars: 1. They both deny that there is an individual soul. 2. They disavow the existence of matter. 3. They reject an outward revelation. 4. They repudiate the notion of sin. 5. They scorn the idea of man's looking away from himself to a Redeemer.

PROF. PROCTOR, the astronomer, says: "There must be in America at least three times as great a proportion of reading and thinking men to the entire population as there is in England."

Religious Intelligence.

—The late Gen. John A. Chedell, of Auburn, N. Y., bequeathed over $25,000 to various Episcopal churches in that State.

—Upward of eight hundred Russian emigrants (Mennonites) left Liverpool for Canada recently in the steamer Sarmatian.

—A congregation of the Disciples of Christ has recently been established in Brooklyn, with an average attendance of about one hundred and seventy.

—One hundred and fifteen missionaries have gone to foreign lands from Mount Holyoke Seminary, Mass., eighteen of them from the last two graduating classes.

—The buildings for the Vanderbilt University are nearly finished. They are to be dedicated next October. The address will be by Dr. Deems, and Com. Vanderbilt is expected to be present.

—The alarm which has prevailed in Syria with regard to the threatened closing of the schools by the Turkish government has passed away. The mission schools are now being carried on without interruption.

—The Wesleyans have on the Fiji Islands 683 chapels, 283 other preaching-places, 68 missionaries, 893 catechists, 25,620 communicants and 124,304 attendants on public worship. Their missions date from the year 1835.

—The Jewish Messenger says that some wealthy Israelites in Rome are discussing the feasibility of erecting a rabbinical seminary in that city, and the indications are that soon, in the vicinity of the Vatican, a college of Jewish ministers will be established.

—Mr. Robert Arthington, of Leeds, England, proposes to subscribe £500 toward a survey of the country lying between St. Paul's river, Liberia, and the Jolliba branch of the Nigar. He thinks that the survey, if followed by the construction of a road, would greatly facilitate the evangelization of Western Africa.

—In speaking of the status of the Catholic Church, ex-Father Gerdeman says its strength is greatly overestimated; there is no reason to fear them as yet. Five millions would cover all the Catholic men, women and children in all the States. Of a new generation the church loses seventy-nine per cent. of the boys and twenty-five of the girls.

—A missionary in China gives the following rapid summary of the present condition of the various religions in that country: Buddhism is making no progress. Mohammedanism is at a discount, because of its rebellious tendencies. Confucianism is strong and active. Roman Catholicism is making rapid progress. Protestant missionaries are doing grandly.

—At the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society at Exeter Hall the chair was occupied by the lord provost of Edinburg. The total receipts of the society for the year were $899,690. Apart from occasional donations, the receipts in Great Britain have for the past few years been averaging an annual increase of $15,000. The work of the Wesleyan Society is divided into three departments—the continental, the colonial, and the strictly foreign missionary. In Ireland 35 missionaries are employed. In France and Switzerland, where there seem to be signs of a religious awakening, 30 ministers are laboring and 1,857 members have been gathered. In Germany there are 19 ministers and 2,103 members. We notice that 2 stations have been occupied in exclusive Bavaria. In Italy 20 ministers and 1,016 members are reported. The growth of the Italian work has led to its division into 2 districts, with Rome as the head of the one and Naples of the other. In Spain and Portugal the work is confined to Gibraltar, Barcelona, Port Mahon and Oporto. There are 3 ministers and 209 members. In the British colonies the society is connected with the colonial conferences, and it is very difficult to separate the purely missionary work from the ordinary home operations of these churches. The two are combined in the returns, which give 1,074 ministers and 114,489 members. In the West Indies progress is slow. The amount of moral and educational agency required for the elevation of the people was underestimated in the sanguine expectations based upon the emancipation of 1831. In West Africa the overthrow of Ashanti rule and the abolition of slavery on the Gold Coast have opened a new future for the missions. In the West Indies and West Africa there are 113 ministers and 53,139 members; in India and Ceylon there are 80 missionaries and 3,541 members; in China 12 missionaries and 254 members. The organized opposition which Christianity is now meeting in China shows that its power is being felt. Societies to advocate the claims of Confucius and others in opposition to the doctrine of Christ have been established in large towns where missions are situated, and the various methods of the European missionaries have been imitated. The Polynesian missions are under the direction of the Australasian Conference. The Friendly Islands are now altogether Christian in their profession, and in the Fiji Islands the annexation to Great Britain opens a new future. It is proposed ere long to commence a mission on the Island of New Britain or New Ireland, or on the east coast of New Guinea. In this mission-field there are 88 missionaries and 31,169 members. No society is pursuing more energetic measures to educate its converts than the Wesleyan. Colleges have been established at various points, new ones are being projected, the standard of education is being steadily raised, and there are 134,156 pupils on the rolls. The views which lead the Wesleyan Society to these efforts are expressed in the close of the report: "We are convinced more and more that the consolidation and perpetuity of the results of missionary labor depend in a great measure upon schools adapted to all classes of the population and to every stage of their mental growth."—Independent.

Our Young People.

WHOSOEVER.

There were children on the floor,
Conning Bible verses o'er.

"Which word, all the Bible through,
Do you love best?" queried She.

"I like Faith the best," said one;
"Jesus is my word alone."

"I like Hope," and "I like Love,"
"I like Heaven, our home above."

One more small than all the rest:
"I like Whosoever best.

"Whosoever—that means all—Even I, who am so small."

"Whosoever!" All agree;
That's the word for you and me.

"Whosoever will" may come—
Find a pardon and a home.

Do Something for Jesus.

I want all my little readers to try and see if they cannot do something to advance the Savior's kingdom. If you love him it will make you happy to know that you are working for him here upon earth, while he sits upon his throne in heaven, pleading for the sinners he has redeemed. Do you wish to know how you can work for him? Perhaps some of you will say: "Oh! yes; by saving our money to give to the missionaries and Sabbath school, and by trying to get Sabbath school scholars." Yes, dear children, those are very good things to do; but there are some who will say truly that they never have any money to give, and therefore they think they can do nothing for the Savior. But this is a mistake. There is something that all, both rich and poor, can do for him—something that is very pleasing in his sight, and costs nothing but self-denial. You can all do little acts of kindness to your brothers and sisters and playmates. You can speak gently to them and try to make them happy. You can be helpful and obedient to your parents. This is working for Jesus as well as when you give money to his cause, though you should give also if you possibly can. WINNIFRED.

From Our Little Friends.

CONSHATTA, TEXAS.

DEAR BISHOP KEENER: I have long thought of writing to you about Grandpa Goodale. I do think he is treating the children so badly. I learn that a Bishop has great authority. You can make him tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." If he is a good man he will obey you. Pa said once, when you gave him his appointment, that the Bishop's will must be obeyed. Grandpa Goodale will obey you. Are you acquainted with him? Could you see him without much trouble? If not, write to him to tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." We all like Grandpa Goodale's stories over here in Texas if he would just finish them when he starts. I agree with Abbie Featherston: "Say to Tom that we don't want to hear any more about bees and hornets and wasps and bumblebees. Grandpa Goodale ought to write his own letters." Abbie thinks Grandpa Goodale must be an Irishman. I had much rather think he is a Dutchman if he is not one of our sort of people.

Now, dear Bishop, I must close. Don't think hard of me for troubling you. I love all the Bishops. You were at our house in Corsicana when you were in Texas. I will try to get something for Mexico before our Conference in November. Do by all means make Grandpa Goodale tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." Your little friend,

ANNIE DAVIS.

ANCHOR LANDING, RED RIVER, July 5, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been reading about the Florence fund. I think that it is a good idea. I will send you a dollar to put with it. I would like to help to send some little girl or boy to school in China. I like to read the ADVOCATE, because it has so many interesting pieces in it.

I live on Red river, four miles above Coushatta. I have been going to school in Mansfield, where we had a very good Sunday school. It is vacation now, and I am so glad to get home. I hope all the little girls and boys will send you a dollar for the Florence fund.

From your little friend,

LUCY LEE.

A Riddle Story.

"Tell me another story, Nan," pleaded a sleepy voice from the lounge in the corner.

"I do believe there is nothing more to tell, Floy. My tongue is tired. I have told you all the bear stories and all the fairy stories—'The Rat that Sat in the Oven,' 'Jack and the Bean-Stalk,' 'London Bridge'—and everything else that I know, since lamplight."

"Tell me one of your very own, then, Nan, please. You are knitting to-night, and it won't bother you to talk, will it?"

"Well, once there was a very steady and persevering maiden who set out to count six billions. She lived in a tall Gothic castle, with the picture of a ship rocking on the sea, in the tower. It seemed a very imposing castle to grandma when she was a little child. I have heard her say that she used to spend hours gazing upon it then, and that was long after the maiden began to count.

"Perhaps you think it was a very silly task for the maiden to undertake; but she managed to be very useful in the world, notwithstanding that she kept on counting along, steadily through all the hours of the day and night. She made the dark old castle seem a cheerful, lively place, and it seemed to do people good just to look at it as they went by.

"Well, the maiden counted on and on, and the years went by, and the people to whom her face had been familiar dropped away one after another, and little children grew up to men and women, and by and by she became very old, although she held her good looks wonderfully, and people even said that she grew handsomer as she grew older.

"I am not going to tell you, Floy, how many years it took her to count five billions; but she had achieved that when I first saw her cheerful face looking from an upper window of her castle, under the tower.

"I soon learned to love her very much. She was very intimately associated with grandma at that time, and is until this day. I think there is a good prospect of her living to finish her sixth billion.

"And now I shall not tell you another story until you tell me who the old lady is. You may ask grandma to help you find out, and I will tell you that you have seen the ancient maiden yourself; and that sometimes when you sleep at grandma's, if you lean out of bed and listen, you will hear her counting cheerfully on in the dark. I have sometimes thought that her voice is strongest in the night."

No symptom of interest or approval came from the lounge where Floy lay; and when Nan stopped talking she heard a faint snore. So she concluded that this riddle story was not so interesting as "Jack and the Bean-Stalk," or "The Rat that Sat in the Oven," which she is very often obliged to tell over three times apiece in one evening.—Anna Boynton, in Youth's Companion.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER.—They were only two little neglected-looking children, with no shoes or stockings on their feet, their dresses all rags, their hats all torn, their faces soiled, and their hair snarled and tangled. I don't believe they had anybody to take care of them. Possibly they had a mother who was obliged to go out and work all day, and leave them to care for each other. Perhaps they had a mother who drank rum, and so forgot these dear little girls.

But whatever was true about their mother, it was very certain that they loved each other; and the big sister, ten years old, took very tender care of her little sister, four years old. Let me tell you how I know this.

One day, while riding in the steam cars, I chanced to look out of the window, and I saw these two little girls at play, chatting and laughing together, when all at once the four-year-old saw the steam engine coming. She jumped up and caught hold of her sister, who, in a laughing and happy way, pressed the little one close to her, and then putting her hands tight over the baby's eyes shut out the sight of the frightful engine as it came rushing and glaring toward her. When it had passed I looked back and saw the baby's face turned lovingly up to her sister's, and chattering gayly again; and I imagined she was trying to tell her how glad she was that she did not let that dreadful engine look at her as it whistled past.

STREET TALK.—"Learn to talk like a gentleman, my boy! Papa is sorry to hear you talk 'street talk!' Do quit it."

"What is 'street talk,' papa?"

"What did you just now say to sister?"

"I told her to be quiet."

"But you said, 'Hush up,' and said it very loud and rudely. And what did you, ten minutes ago, say to Martha?"

"I told her to go out of my way."

"But you did not say it half so nicely as that. You said: 'Get out of this.' And I think you called her some name. What was it?"

Harry looked ashamed, and the tears came; but he answered: "I called her a dirty snick."

"Just so. That is what I mean by street talk. All these naughty words, and especially the rough tone and manner, you hear on the street. They belong to those boys who have never been taught any better, and to those men who, though knowing better, yet do not care anything about the better way. But my little boy must never use street talk."—Southern Churchman.

THREE HINTS WORTH TAKING.—1. Never attempt to do anything that is not right. Just so surely as you do you will get into trouble. Sin always brings sorrow sooner or later. If you even suspect that anything is wicked, do it not until you are sure that your suspicions are groundless.

2. When you do attempt anything that is right, go through with it. Be not easily discouraged. Form habits of perseverance. Yield not to sloth and sleep and recklessness. To resist all these will not be easy, but you will feel that you have done right when you get through.

3. Do not waste your money. Perhaps you have very little. Then take the more care of it. Besides helping to spread the gospel, buy some good books and read them well. A good book is one of the best things in the world. If you cannot buy as many as you need, borrow from others, and return them safe and sound. Never let a book lie where it may be injured.—Sunday School Visitor.

A CHEROKEE school girl, who had noticed that some of the stars twinkle while others give a steady light, once asked her teacher:

"What for one star wink at me and another star not?"

CHILDREN AT HOME.

It is scarcely a home at all without children. A house in which there is none is desolate, whatever may be its spacious halls and rich upholstery. Grown people may move there in mirth and revelry, or live in quiet and orderly state. Everything may be kept prim and neat, with no traces of the disorder and abandon of young life, but there is a painful void. People who do not want children, and shun the care and worry of them, should by all means betake themselves to cloisters, or live, as Troglodytes, away from the society of civilized men.

Not to sustain the parental relation is to be deprived of one of the most important conditions of our education. For moral and spiritual ends it is of invaluable service to have the parental affections awakened and developed, to be tried in our patience, and to feel the responsibility which the nurture and training of children demands. Where houses and people are childless through misfortune, Providence may have some compensating provisions, but the loss is one so serious that we can scarcely see how there can be any full reparation.

Parents can understand better than others those declarations and promises of Scripture that refer to this relation: "If ye, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more will your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him?" Parents come nearer fathoming the fatherhood of God than even the angels do. They have a peculiar appreciation of the gift of the only begotten Son. Do they not get deeper into this profound and affecting passage than the seraphim: "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" There is a richness of tenderness and pathos in the parable of the prodigal son which none but fathers and mothers wholly comprehend. They have in them the image of the divine paternity, and are brought into completest sympathy with the highest manifestations of divine love and compassion. There are chords in the human heart which it would seem that God himself cannot make to vibrate, except through the parental relation. It opens the understanding to some of the grandest disclosures of revelation, and presents a distinct field for the display of submission under sanctified sorrow. Children in the house, whether they are there to live or die, are a blessing. Their being and training call forth a class of affections, and antagonize a selfishness which nothing else can reach. Their life is a discipline which has no substitute, and their death is a sorrow that has no kinship in the category of afflictions.

The home is the school of the children in it. Their characters are formed there, there they take their departure for a career of virtue and usefulness, or for a course of vice, and to be the pests of society. Outside influences for evil are to be counteracted by the training in the family. Here, and effectually nowhere else, can they be fortified against the temptations which await them in the world. Neither secular nor Sunday schools can be intrusted with the work which must be done by the parents at home. Religion, morals, industry, neatness, practicalness, self-help, good manners, must all be taught in the house and in the childhood period. Herein parents should have no need of priests or dancing-masters. The home circle and the fireside should be the school-room for piety and politeness.

There is no adequate substitute for a good home, and to the young there is no privation more calamitous. In some families there is a tyranny that rebounds after awhile, and the children are the worse for it. Cunning, duplicity and falsehood are fostered, and filial love and reverence are destroyed. In other households there is anarchy. The children run riot with excess of license, and are an annoyance to parents and guests. The broken chairs, the torn curtains, dirt and general disorder show the lack of all restraint. It is a positive trial to visit houses where the children govern the parents. The visitor feels embarrassment for the good, easy-going, slip-shod, over-indulgent mother in her futile endeavors to quiet the chronic ramps, and to secure temporary peace. Surely there is a more excellent way. Government there must be; obedience must be exacted, and in well-ordered homes the children are olive plants, green and beautiful and beautifying, and not nettles and stinging cactus.

We think of the model household as having in it not a lone child kept as in a bandbox, but a group of merry, romping, loving boys and girls, from the elder ones blooming into their teens to the little bud that is the care and pet of all. They are not to be too neat in their every-day clothes, and there are looseness and comfort in their array rather than any affectation of expense and style. And this bunch of little folk is instinct with the spirit of obedience and deference to the parental will, with no trace of painful fear, but with every element of sunshine and gladness in it. Obedience, rightly implanted, brings in its train truth, honor, candor and conscience.

About the rod and its use we cannot enter at large. The things we have indicated must be secured somehow, and generally they can be without much use of the classic birch. We have no quarrel with Solomon, but he turned out badly himself, and his children were not models. As a rule, the whipping should be done before the child is ten years old, and not much need be done after the sixth year. More children have been spoiled and ruined by harsh and injudicious use of the rod than have been saved by its wise application. Since we have been living in a large city, with close neighbors, we have rarely been free from the annoying screams and cries of whipped children. It is a nuisance, an evil, a barbarous cruelty throughout the world that needs to be abated. A parent irate, frenzied with anger, belaboring a helpless and ill-instructed child, ought to be indicted for felony. The rod may be good in some cases, but few parents have the wisdom, grace and patience to use it aright. Firmness, love, prayerfulness and self control will be more effective than the harsher course with the average child.

Religion from the Cradle.

I wish to say to my good and highly respected friend, Bro. Shanks, a few things which, as I see, he with many others has either forgotten or lost sight of by merging them hastily into other questions.

But, first, a word or two as to his misunderstanding me to speak disparagingly of a person remembering the time and place of his conversion. O no. I spoke favorably of it. I only spoke in opposition to making such remembrance a test of conversion. It would prove that a man was converted, but of itself could be no evidence whatever of a converted or religious state now. Reliance, therefore, much or little, on such a mere historic fact for present religious satisfaction would be exceedingly dangerous. I have seen men of abandoned wickedness who could remember the time and place of their conversion as well as Bro. Shanks; and I have known a still greater number of others, of cold, lifeless religion, remember about as well, and rely upon such reminiscence to their ruin. Now Bro. Shanks understands me. A conversion back yonder, remembered or forgotten, is of itself of no religious value whatever; but, if relied on to prove present grace, is both dangerous and ruinous. Remembered conversion, on the one hand, proves no more than remembered wickedness on the other. The great practical question is: What am I now? A plentiful meal a year ago is no protection against hunger to-day.

But my chief intention in writing now is to embrace the occasion of Bro. Shanks' suggestion about children's religion. I suggested that people converted at the proper time could not remember the time or occasion of their conversion. This raises the question as to the proper time for conversion. Everything that ought to be done at all should be done at the right time. Especially is this applicable to conversion. The greatest misfortune the church suffers to-day is the natural disadvantages of late conversions. I say natural, because those disadvantages, other things being equal, are universal. The earlier a person is converted the better and more useful a Christian he will be. Conversion at twenty is better than at thirty, but better still at two or five, or at the proper time, whenever that is.

Religion from the cradle is certainly the true doctrine. A child is capable of true religion—religion in a child, not in a man, I mean—long years before he has either intellectual capability or the use of language to give you any intelligible verbal account of it. If a child of three or four years, or any other age anybody chooses to suggest, has a clear perception of obedience, of being good, that God sees and loves him, lisps a tiny prayer, repeating after his mother, knowing that God hears the prayer, is afraid to do wrong lest God will not like him—if this child is not a Christian of the highest type, then I have yet to learn what Christianity is. I don't believe much theology is necessary to a very high attainment in true religion.

Such a child knows nothing, literally or intellectually or theologically, about conversion. He knows nothing whatever of his conversion. He knows he loves to be good, and that constitutes his entire theological curriculum. Now then and there is where every person ought to be converted—before, long before, he knows or can know anything theologically or intellectually about it. He is well acquainted with the thing, but is utterly ignorant of the name of it, and don't know that his experience is different from everybody else's. Technically he don't know there is such a thing as conversion. Neither has he any knowledge or perception of time, place or occasion where he first began to experience these feelings. And the reason is: he was a child.

Childhood, with all its frivolities and shallowness of thought, is natural and right. It is one of the states of life. God made it, and adapts his religion as well to that as to later and more advanced periods. Conversion is the beginning of a religious life, whether at the age of three or four, or thirty or forty. Many of our children were once converted and are backslidden. They were foolishly supposed to be too young to be religious, and so were not properly nursed and trained by either parents or pastors. Here lies our greatest practical trouble: We suffer our children to grow up without inculcating a spirit of prompt and ready parental obedience, and hence without religious training, until they reach ten or twenty years; or, if converted at two, four or six, they backslide and then grow up wicked, and at twenty, thirty or forty we try the almost impracticable enterprise of bringing them back to Christ.

The emotion, feeling and conscious, visible exercise we see is not conversion, but the effect of it. This effect is as various in different persons as human character, temperament, age and condition are various. In adult persons they have lived long, long years in open, known, defiant rebellion against God. Little children have not. The conversion of the two respectively may be illustrated as follows:

Two oaks are alike crooked, and require to be straightened. Nothing else is the matter. The one is a hundred feet high and a hundred years old. Its large branches are gnarled, crooked and strong, defying the storms of many winters. To straighten it will require an engine of a thousand horse-power or a tornado, and will make things crack again. The neighborhood will know it. The other oak is a quarter of an inch high, and crooked too, but a zephyr or a dew-drop will straighten it, and the operation will cause no great convulsion, not even a storm. A conversion sufficiently phenomenal to be remembered was a bad one, occurring at a bad time. A thousand pities it had not been done back yonder where the little, soft, tiny oak was straightened. I had rather have one conversion in the nursery, well cared for, than ten out of it. The latter may be remembered, but in a majority of cases that is all of it.

R. ARNEY.

Our Mission Work.

The Richmond Christian Advocate, taking items out of the last missionary report, gives us the following excellent summary:

The first item that falls under our eye is that which shows that 708,558 members of the Methodist Episcopal Church South gave to this cause last year $104,524.23.

The next is that for foreign missions, of which the General Board now has oversight, the domestic missions having been turned over to the Annual Conference Boards, the assessment is $72,000. This is a small sum divided among 700,000 members, and we ought to raise it, and add as much more to it. The report urges that our people pray for the outpouring of the spirit of missions. Yes, with all our gifts, let us pray for missions and missionaries with fervor and faith.

Of our domestic missions we have not space to write fully and of all. They are in the destitute portions of our field, and are really home evangelization work.

The largest of these is the German mission. The principal part of this work lies in the far Southwest, in the States of Louisiana and Texas. A smaller but very important and promising part of it lies in the Baltimore and Virginia Conferences. The summary of the work in the Southwest is as follows: 20 missions, 19 churches valued at $100,000; 890 members; received during the year, 150; adults baptized, 1; infants, 131; 22 Sunday schools, with 850 scholars; missionary money collected, $1,260.70. Only 2 of the 20 stations in the Southwest are self-supporting. All the rest receive help from the Parent Board, and we presume from the Annual Conferences near them.

The statistics of the German work in Virginia and Maryland are as follows:

Baltimore city, Keener mission—Members, 42; infants baptized, 9; Sunday schools, 2; scholars, 264; members received, converted and on profession of faith, 21; removed with certificate, 4; teachers in Sunday schools, 16; superintendents, 2; exhorters licensed, 2; licensed to preach and entered itinerancy, 1.

Arlington, Baltimore Conference, Pierce mission—Members, 25; infants baptized, 5; Sunday schools, 1; scholars, 51; teachers, 8; accessions in membership, 5; licensed to exhort, 1.

Richmond German mission—Members, 43; infants baptized, 8; Sunday schools, 1; scholars, 51; teachers and officers, 7; members received, converted and on profession of faith, 12; removed with certificate, 2; without certificate, 1.

The amount of money collected in this field for mission purposes was $581.40.

It will also be seen that the number of Sunday school scholars is 276 in these missions, while in 20 missions in the Southwest the whole number is 850. This speaks well for our German work in the East. The amount of money collected also compares favorably with that reported in the Southwest. We are well convinced that along our coasts as far south as Savannah there is an inviting field among the Germans, and it is to be regretted that the board does not make an appropriation sufficient to allow the superintendent to visit the large cities south of us, where there are hundreds of Germans that ought to have the gospel. We do hope that the proper officers of the board will consider this point.

Our Indian missions lie in the Indian Territory, west of the Mississippi river, among the Cherokees, Choctaws, Chickasaws and Creeks. The total number of Indian members is 4,613, white 397, colored 360; there are 69 local preachers among the Indians, besides the regular itinerants. During the past year 434 adults and 406 infants were baptized. There are in the Indian Conference 33 Sunday schools, 103 teachers and 778 scholars; $244.56 were collected for missions. The appropriation to this mission reached $12,000.

We have in China 2 missionaries, 3 native preachers, and 2 who are preparing for the ministry. There are 86 members. There are 3 schools connected with the mission, at which about 50 children are taught. Last year there were 4 adults and 7 children baptized. Rev. Y. J. Allen publishes a church paper which has a wide circulation, and besides this a number of tracts, a catechism and a small hymn-book have been printed. A church has been completed in Shanghai, and is called "The Church of Glad News."

Our mission in Mexico is new, but gives great promise. In the city of Mexico we have a good church building worth $15,000, secured by Bishop Keener when he was there on his first visit. We have 3 preachers, 1 teacher, 1 colporteur, 2 schools and 160 scholars; no members reported. At Corpus Christi we have 62 members, at San Diego 68, at Presenas 54, and at Laredo 20 members. There are nearly 100 children under instruction at these towns.

We have made a beginning of a Cuban mission at Key West, Fla., and there are loud and earnest calls from Brazil. Rev. William Newman, of our church, who has been in that country for several years, and some of whose letters we have published, represents the field as now fully open for missions. It is truly a grand field, and we should enter it without delay. We trust the men will be found and that the money will be given. Who will say $500 for a mission in Brazil? May God stir up some noble-hearted man or woman to say: "I will give $500 for Brazil."

Good Advice.

In our account of the commencement of Centenary College we referred to the eloquent address of Judge J. G. Kilbourne, delivered before the Alumni Association. We are glad to find the address in full in the Patriot-Democrat, of Clinton, La. The following is the concluding part. Sorry that our space does not permit the publication of all.

We have as much to fear from the misguided zeal of our friends as from the malevolence of our enemies. Level-headed, prudent citizens must control the front. They cannot risk their all to hot-headed zeal, however honest and patriotic it may be. We want strength in this crisis of our affairs, in council and in action. We want muscle directed by brains. We want action directed by principle.

We want no Samson Agonesies, strong in blind rage, pulling down the temple of law and order, destroying himself and his enemies in the ruins; but a Samson unshorn of his locks by any political Delilah—Samson, fresh from the bosom of nature and truth—to scatter the Philistines as the chaff is swept before the whirlwind.

Let us respect the laws and obey them, and force others to do likewise. Let us under the law, and in subordination to order, work out our political regeneration.

Live men, prudent men, successful men, such as manage well their private affairs, must come to the front and give their time, their services, their counsels to the State. They must get hold of the affairs of government, and manage them so wisely, so prudently, so impartially that our opponents will be compelled to confess that power has at last been placed where it belongs.

We must deal fairly with our opponents. We must discriminate between those who are destructive from malicious motives and those who are destructive from simple ignorance. While we demand of them obedience to law we must see to it that obedience to law and order is the rule of our conduct.

The citizen must not dodge his duty to his State by dodging the jury box, the forum, the polls. Through all legal means he must speak. He must make the precepts of the law his rule of conduct, both in public and private life.

Live honorably. Scorn that which is little and mean in social intercourse, in business transactions, in private and family affairs. Harm no one—no, not the humblest of God's creatures—in malice or for revenge, or in anger. Give to each his own, whether he is able to maintain his rights or not. Let the citizen do these things and a new condition of affairs will arise. Again will political health be restored; again will prosperity bless our land.

I believe, as much as I believe the year will come, that next year, if we are patient and watchful, the centennial year of our national existence will be our jubilee. Until then "our strength is to sit still"—aye, very still and very alert and very strong, as the lion sits when crouching for his deadly spring.

The live men of the nation, North, South, East and West, are awake. The shadows of night are departing, and the light of morning is illuminating the eastern hills. Our long night of sickness and sorrow, of delirium and despondency, is departing before the approaching health-giving and hope-restoring god of day.

I repeat it, the coming year will bring our political redemption. And then, in the words of the eloquent senator quoted from above, "there will be a civil war—a very civil war indeed."

It will be a war of competing industries, a war of rival factories for ascendency in the fields of letters, of mechanism and of mind. And the influence which will animate the combatants to glorious deeds will not descend upon them from the angry face of fiery, bloody wars, but it will come as an inspiration, with the voice of "peace on earth, good will toward men," from the risen Star of Bethlehem.

REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The first convocation of the Reformed Episcopal Church in South Carolina was recently held at Pineopolis, Charleston county. The convocation was presided over by Rev. Benjamin Johnson, missionary for the South, with Rev. P. F. Stevens as secretary. It consisted of six licensed lay readers (colored,) and three delegates from each of seven churches (all colored,) representing six hundred and thirty-eight communicants. Arrangements were made for the thorough training of candidates for the ministry in a school to be under the supervision of Mr. Stevens. Systematic visitations of the various parts of the missionary field were also provided for and announced. Plans for providing themselves with church buildings were discussed and acted upon. Under the leadership of two such men as Rev. Benjamin Johnson and Rev. P. F. Stevens, and with the blessings of almighty God, we expect this movement to result in great good to the colored people of the low country.—Christian Neighbor.

THE VANDERBILT.—Profs. Shipp, Joynes, Safford and Lupton are in their respective homes at the Vanderbilt, and Chancellor Garland sailed from England, August 14, and is expected to be in his residence the first week in September. Profs. Granbery, Arnold and Hamphreys are to be in place by the middle of September. Profs. Lipscomb and Wuchell are to be present at the opening of the university, October 3. The professor of mathematics is to be elected in a few days, out of a number of eminent persons applying for the place. The main building rapidly approaches completion. The bell is just about to be hung and swung and rung. We shall be able to say more about it by and by. All things will be ready for the opening of the four departments at the time announced. Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE French Wesleyan Conference met in June at Dieu-le-fit. The session was a harmonious and profitable one. Since the last Conference was held in this place, in 1858, the membership of the church had increased by five hundred, and the number of Sunday school scholars by nearly one thousand. The Institution Evangelique was reported to be rising, but had not fully recovered from the difficulties of last year. The Pensionnat Evangelique (for young ladies) is in a much better condition. There have been seventy-one pupils this year. All the ministers this year found homes in private families, and for the first time were boarded as well as lodged.

THE fourth volume of Dr. Whedon's Commentary, including First Corinthians and Second Timothy, will soon be out of press.

WOOD'S BIBLE ANIMALS. A description of the habits, structure and uses of every living creature mentioned in the Scriptures, from the ape to the coral. By the Rev. J. G. Wood, M. A., F. L. S. William Garretson & Co., Philadelphia; William Garretson & Co., Galesburg, Ill., Columbus, O., Nashville, Tenn., Houston, Texas, San Francisco, Cal., 1875.

This is a large octavo of 716 pages, copiously illustrated, and abounding in useful and curious information concerning the animals mentioned in the Bible. Added to the main work is an article by Dr. James McCosh on Evolution, and another on Research and Travels in Bible Lands by Rev. Daniel March, D. D. The present is a new and enlarged edition of a work published some years ago, and is very complete in every respect, combining the best results of both scientific and popular instruction. To Bible readers and students, and to young people, this volume will be entertaining and useful.

THE SOUTHERN REVIEW, VOL. 18, NO. 35, JULY, 1875.—Our copy for some reason was misplaced, and, owing to engagements and absence from the office, has but now been overtaken. The first article, The Idea of God, or Logic in Theology, has been largely and adversely criticised by the Southern Methodist press. It strikes us as being very nearly New School Calvinism. Certainly it is not in accord with Wesleyan doctrine, especially on the subject of reprobation and perseverance. The articles of this number, all able and of great value, are: 1. The Idea of God, or Logic in Theology. 2. Henry Timrod. 3. Wind and Weather Probabilities. 4. Childhood as an Element in Modern Romance. 5. The Catacombs of Rome. 6. The Conflict Between Science and Religion. 7. Blackwell vs. O'Keefe. 8. University Organization. 9. The Last Days of David Livingstone. 10. Notices of Books.

IT IS with regret that we have heard of the death of Rev. John Radin, chaplain of the Scandinavian Seamen's Society, of this city. He was a local preacher of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, holding his membership in the Felicity Street church of New Orleans, and had labored among the Scandinavian seamen who visit this port for the last two or three years. He was a devoted worker in this important field, and had, through the co-operation and assistance of the evangelical churches here, secured a very commodious property on Esplanade street for church and Sunday school purposes, and for a reading-room. Bro. Radin was a man of great purity and simplicity of character, and consecrated to his work. He died of flux on Monday, August 30. His end was peace. He leaves a dependent family.

WE SINCERELY condole with the parents, Rev. E. R. Strickland and wife, in their bereavement. Their little boy, Emory T., aged twenty months, died suddenly near Summit, Miss., on July 30. Bro. Strickland was from home on his way to a preaching appointment when the sad tidings overtook him. The fair and beautiful child, full of intelligence and promise, was snatched away as in a moment, but it is well with him. May God sustain the sorrowing ones, and sanctify the stroke.

WE HAVE RECEIVED Nos. 1 and 2 of a weekly publication containing sermons by Rev. B. M. Palmer, of this city. They are reported by C. W. Colton, phonographer. Clark & Hofeline, publishers. Thousands will be glad to have the opportunity of reading the able and earnest sermons of Dr. Palmer. We suppose the publication will be continued for some time.

A CAMP MEETING will be held seven miles from Alexandria, La., near Pleasant Grove church, Rapides circuit, beginning on Thursday, September 30, and embracing the first Sunday in October. Preachers and people are invited.

THOMAS MULLETT.

THE court of inquiry in the matter of the presentment of Bishop Whittingham for refusing to or neglecting to bring to trial the rector and assistant rector of Calvary church for using certain prayers for the dead, which were charged to be contrary to the doctrine and canons of the Episcopal Church, met at Grace church, Baltimore, July 29. It was composed of two clergymen and two laymen from four dioceses, making sixteen members in all. It adjourned on Monday, August 2, having decided that there were not sufficient grounds to put the bishop to trial upon the charges. It also adopted a resolution condemning the practices of the offending clergymen of Calvary church.

A PRESIDING ELDER KILLED BY LIGHTNING.—Rev. Perry Spillman, presiding elder of Glasgow district, Kentucky Conference, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, was killed by lightning, July 26. The Nashville Advocate says: "He was one of the best preachers in the colored connection, and his loss is deeply deplored."

MARRIED.

McKINNEY—SHEID.—August 18, 1875, at the residence of E. T. Clark, by the Rev. R. G. Hagan, Mr. J. W. McKinney to Miss Jennie J. Sheid, daughter of Col. Sheid, all of Calhoun county, Ala.

A Card.

MR. EDITOR: My election as principal of the Male Institute, Summerfield, Ala., has been announced in your paper, and also in the Nashville Christian Advocate, and the statement made that I would at once enter upon the discharge of the duties of that position.

It becomes necessary for me to state that, owing to unavoidable circumstances, I have declined the position thus tendered me by the trustees. I so wrote to Dr. Mitchell as soon as he informed me of my election; but I suppose his communication for the Advocates was sent off before he received my note. I understand the trustees have secured the services of another man, and I hope that that time-honored institution will again become as flourishing as in days of yore.

Although I have declined this position, I expect to teach. I have accepted the principalship of a school just being enterprised in Wilcox county, Ala.—a school for both sexes. The people of the community are manifesting very great interest in the matter; they are putting up a large, commodious house, and we expect to have quite a large number of students.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

LOWER PEACHTREE, ALA., Aug. 24, 1875.

Pensacola, Fla.

MR. EDITOR: As there is considerable excitement and many false rumors respecting yellow fever in this city, I wish to give a fair statement in reference thereto.

Several mechanics, who had been working on the government hospital near Fort Barrancas, on the fourteenth instant, dispatched Mayor Jones to know if they could come home. He answered: "No; by no means." That night they came, irrespective of his authority, one of them being very sick. On Monday morning two physicians were sent to examine the case, who pronounced it yellow fever. Prompt measures were instituted to prevent ingress and egress, and various sanitary means employed to prevent the spreading of the disease. In other respects the city was never more healthy than at the present, although the atmosphere is quite humid, and the rains frequent and abundant.

The week of prayer, which closed with our third quarterly meeting—Dr. Cox, our presiding elder, being present—was an interesting and, we trust, profitable occasion.

JOS. T. CURRY, P. C.

PENSACOLA, FLA., August 21, 1875.

BISHOP CUMMINS, says the New York Christian Advocate, attended a meeting at Newburg, N. Y., last week, preliminary to organizing a Reformed Episcopal church. He said there were now fifty ministers and forty congregations of that church in the United States and Canada. The denomination is eighteen months old. Twenty-four families at Newburg joined the movement for a church.

OSBURN HOUSE, ROCHESTER, N. Y.—A card of this house appears in this issue. Our correspondent says:

"There is no hotel in the country that can surpass it in comfort and elegance. D. H. Bromley, and his nephew, C. P. Bromley, conduct the hotel, both of whom are men of experience in the business, and leave nothing undone to insure the comfort of their guests. They are both highly respected, having been life long residents, and are amiable, courteous and polite to every one with whom they come in contact. The house has recently undergone a thorough renovation at considerable expense to the proprietors. Families and business men visiting Rochester will take a note of this. The house is centrally located, being contiguous to all the railroads going north, south, east and west. An omnibus belonging to the hotel is always in readiness to convey passengers to and from the hotel."

THE New York Conservatory of Music, the card of which appears in our advertising columns, is represented to us as an admirable institution, well adapted to the work of giving a finished knowledge and execution of vocal and instrumental music to all its branches. Read the advertisement.

MERCHANTS going to New York will find the Grand Union Hotel a very desirable stopping-place. Comfort, convenience, luxury and economy are the advantages offered at this popular hotel. The house is elegantly furnished throughout, and the table unsurpassed.

Publisher's Department.

AMOUNTS WHICH WE CANNOT CREDIT.

Most of the irregularities and omissions of correspondents can be explained by reference to the mail lists, to the letters of correspondents at offices at which envelopes are postmarked, or by writing or waiting for inquiries from parties for their receipts; but there are a few from whom we have not been able to hear or obtain the information necessary to enable us to know to whom or to what purpose amounts should be applied:

Nov. 15, 1874—From Shreveport, La	$2 00
Nov. 16, 1874—From Canton, Miss	2 00
June 14, 1875—From Selma, Ala	5 00
Nov. 24, 1874—From Mrs. Mattie M. Irvine	2 00
Dec. 3, 1874—From Jas. Williams, Isney, Ala.	5 00
Apr. 5, 1875—From Mrs. Hattie E. Winn	2 00
May —, 1875—From Yazoo City, Miss	2 00

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither.—We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of one department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity, or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed. Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and run more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

THE WESTMINSTER HOTEL.—We quote the following from our New York correspondent, now quartered at the above-named hotel:

"Charles Dickens, Wilkie Collins and many other distinguished visitors to New York have made their home at the Westminster Hotel, from which fact it may be inferred that the Westminster is one of the most select and comfortable hotels in New York, as indeed it is. The rates of charges, however, are not higher than at other first-class houses but the superiority of its accommodations, its most excellent and convenient location, and the comparative quiet of the neighborhood, gives it peculiar and decided advantages. The Westminster is conducted on the European plan, and is situated almost in the center of the city—one block from Broadway and Union Square, on Sixteenth street and Irving Place, and in the immediate vicinity of the great stores, places of amusement, churches, etc. Visitors to New York will do well to give it a trial."

CHURCH ORGANS.—Those who wish to employ or consult first-class organ builders should see the advertisement of Messrs. Jardine & Son in another column—a firm of thirty-nine years standing in the city of New York. We know of no better or more reliable firm in the business, and they will be able to give references to persons and specimens of work which we think will be satisfactory to any one.

PIANOS AND ORGANS.—We refer our readers to the advertisement of Messrs. George A. Prince & Co., which will be found in to-day's paper. Of this house our agent writes us as follows:

"This is the largest organ manufactory in the world. Mr. Prince, the founder, commenced the manufacture of reed organs and melodeons in 1846. The foundation of the present huge business was modest. Slowly and solidly the structure rose, and to-day fifty-five thousand organs and melodeons have been sent broadcast over all the earth. It would be impossible to indicate to our readers the quality and capability of the instruments Prince & Co. turn out. A very complete illustrated catalogue pamphlet, giving the price and all else interested parties could desire to know, will be mailed to any address on notifying the firm.

"Churches, Sunday schools, lodge-rooms, etc., will save money by conferring with Mr. Prince before purchasing elsewhere. For power, richness and delicacy of tone these organs are superior to all others.

"Mr. Prince is one of Buffalo's honored citizens, highly esteemed by all classes."

FOREST CITY HOUSE, CLEVELAND, O.—We quote from a private letter in reference to the above-named hotel:

"There is no hotel in the above city that offers such advantages for families as the Forest City House. It is centrally located, facing a beautiful park, quiet and home-like in all its arrangements, first-class in all its appointments, and reasonable in its charges. The senior partner has been connected with hotels for twenty years, and knows exactly the kind of house that suits the traveling public, and when they leave are sure to bring away good impressions of the hotel."

THOSE of our readers who propose to visit Cincinnati during the coming Industrial Exposition will be glad to know that this paper can be seen on file at the office of E. N. Freshman, advertising agent, 190 West Fourth street, where all facilities will be extended them to read their home news.

Farm, Garden and Household.

City Bee Culture.

Under this head the Scientific American has the following statements:

A manufacturer of a summer drink, which seems to be quite popular during the present heated weather, has taken a store in the neighborhood of our office, and placed in the show window a bee-hive, in which, in full view of the crowd which constantly gathers, the busy insects make the honey which, it is asserted, is mingled with the cooling beverage. The window is open at the top, and the bees are allowed to collect their materials from the street refuse. The honey seems to be of excellent quality, and the bees require no further care nor attention than if foraging among their favorite clover-fields.

At the fair of the American Institute, last fall, a very fine case of honey was exhibited, the contents of which, we were informed, had been obtained by the bees entirely from the swill barrels, the sugar-house waste, and the flowers in the public parks of the city. There was nothing about the material to distinguish it from the best honey made from clover, and it undoubtedly should and probably did find a market just as readily. The quantity of such honey-yielding refuse wasted in the metropolis is enormous. Why, then, should it not be more widely utilized through the bees? Private apiculture can be carried on just as well on a house-top or in a back yard as upon a farm, and any one with such space at his disposal might easily manage a few hives and build up a paying business, and it would afford amusement to the experimenter and his friends.

MILK DIET IN HEART DISEASE.—The opinion of Dr. Pecholier, an eminent French physician, is now cited in favor of milk diet in the treatment of disease of the heart. He states that in active hypertrophy—namely, in those cases where the consequences of the development of the muscular fibers prevail over the embarrassment of the circulation caused by the dilatation of the cavities, the contraction of the orifices or the insufficiency of the valves—and where, in consequence, the tension of the blood is great in the arteries, and the radial pulse is full and hard—in such cases, at their commencement, the milk diet, together with the use of digitalis, and sometimes without it, will, if continued long enough, induce at once an amendment of the symptoms, and even, at last, all absorption of the superabundant muscular tissues, and thus effect a cure. It is found that, under the influence of this diet, the impulses of the heart diminish, together with the palpitations, also the congested condition of the face, the brain and the lungs. The patient experiences an unexpected improvement, and by the adoption of this plan life may be prolonged and rendered more supportable, a great palliation of the symptoms resulting, even though there be no cure.

THE VALUE OF SUNFLOWERS.—We would call the attention of farmers at this time to the value of sunflowers as a crop, and enumerate some of their values and uses. In the first place, the flowers abound in honey, and furnish food for bees. The seeds contain oleaginous matter, and yield oil at the rate of one gallon to the barrel, which is but little inferior to olive oil. One acre will produce fifty bushels of seeds. It is also valuable for food for horses and poultry; it has been used for bread by the American Indians, and also in Portugal. The leaves are excellent fodder for cattle. The stalk, while growing, may be utilized as bean poles where they are scarce or difficult to be obtained, and when dry may be used as a roofing, or set up against a fence to form a wind-break. They contain a large amount of potash, and are excellent for fire-kindling. The seed has also been recommended for fuel. The reputation of the growing sunflower to absorb miasmatic vapors, and in preventing fever and ague, is well known.—Buckeye Farmer.

BRAN AND CORN MEAL FOR COWS. The Practical Farmer says: "It is well settled, in the opinion of all our best dairymen, that bran greatly promotes the milk secretions in cows, and it is fed almost universally. About equally mixed with corn meal is the usual proportion. This mixture seems to promote both quantity and quality of milk. Hungarian grass is also found for milch cows to be rather superior to the ordinary run of hay. The last year or two Hungarian grass has loomed up wonderfully in the estimation of our dairy farmers; and a very large scope of land will be sowed with it the coming season. It matures for cutting in about sixty days, and produces two to four tons per acre—the latter, of course, on good soils. Three pecks to the acre is the usual allowance of seed.

TO MAKE AND KEEP SAUSAGE.—For one hundred pounds of meat, two and one-quarter pounds of salt, one-half pound of pepper, one-half pound of sage. Some vary this by putting in a little more sage and a little less pepper, but the above rule is a very good one. When chopped and seasoned, pack the meat firmly in tin pans or small stone jars; take lard melted just enough to spread with a knife and cover the top with lard an inch thick, to keep out the air. This will keep nicely all winter, unless it freezes and thaws too often. Some make balls and fry sausage, packing them and covering with melted lard, but it is some labor to prepare a large quantity that way—more than most people would relish.

CURE FOR THE OPIUM HABIT.—In a recent report on the condition of the English hospital at Pekin, China, the attending physician gives a formula for "anti-opium pills." This remedy is composed of extract of henbane, extract of gentian, camphor, quinine, cayenne pepper, ginger and cinnamon, with castile soap and syrup to form the mass, and licorice powder to form the coating. The efficacy of these pills in overcoming the opium habit, and in preventing the suffering on giving up the use of that poison, is stated to have been proved in numerous cases. The native remedies, it is said, contain opium in some form, and most frequently the ashes of opium already smoked, and consequently are inefficacious, it being as difficult to discontinue the use of the medicine as of the drug itself.

SAVE THE SOAPSUDS.—However deplorable washing day may be to the household (and the careful housemistress or tidy maid has it in her power to greatly modify its discomforts,) to the garden it is a very bountiful day. Our hungry and thirsty grape vines and flowers are glad of every drop of wash water, and will repay every bit of fatigue it may cost us to give them this fertilizer. If the sun is shining hot when we go out to dispense our favor, it is best for us to dig a slight trench not far from the root of the plant, and pour the water into it, and cover again with the top soil. This makes the water go farther, and at the same time does not tempt the rootlets to the surface of the ground.—Duchess Farmer.

DISINFECTANT AND MOUTH WASH. A very weak solution of permanganate of potash will destroy instantly any taint from diseased teeth or imperfectly-cleaned plates, and should always be used to rinse the spittoon in hot weather every time it is made use of. It is cheap, satisfactory, almost tasteless, not poisonous, and quite free from smell. It may be satisfactory to some to know that this will remove the taint of smoking from the breath if used as a mouth-wash.

BEST FORM FOR FRUIT-TREES.—The majority of a convention of German pomologists expressed a decided preference for the pyramidal form for fruit-trees. The advantages claimed for it are the minimum of shade, greater strength, avoidance of severe wounding of the tree, production of better fruit, and at the same time fewer disadvantages from storms, weight of snow, excess of fruit, theft, etc.

STEWED ONIONS.—Boil two or three large Spanish onions till very soft; then put them in the oven in a dish with a little butter; bake till brown; baste and turn, and then put them in your dish; dredge flour over the butter left in the dish; add some hot milk. Stir well. Boil it up with a little catchup and seasoning, and then pour it over the onions.

A HANDFUL of quicklime, mixed in four ounces of linseed oil and boiled to a good thickness, makes, when spread on plates and hardened, a glue which can be used in the ordinary way, but will resist fire.

IF YOU are stung by a bee or wasp, wet some cut tobacco and lay it on the sting. In five minutes it is cured.

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENTS,

22 W. Fourth St. (Merchants' Exchange Building,) CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Orders for all kinds of Merchandise and Manufactured Goods filled at the lowest market rates; and any information needed regarding prices or other matters connected with the trade promptly furnished.

Our office in the entrance to the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 21 and 22 West Fourth street, where its many members are constantly passing, gives us the best of facilities for exhibiting samples of Grain, Cotton and Manufactured Articles, which advantage we offer to those desiring our services.

From the Cincinnati Price Current, March 13, 1869.

"We desire to call the attention of merchants in the interior to the card of Messrs. H. D. Rogers & Co., which is published in another column. This firm proposes introducing a new business, namely: filling orders for any kind of Merchandise or Manufactured Goods to be found in this market, charging only a small commission, thus enabling country merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and indeed all classes, to procure any article they may need at the lowest cash price, without incurring the expenses of coming to the city. And as Mr. Rogers is thoroughly conversant with the city trade in all its departments, and one whose integrity and fidelity to the interests of his customers are of the highest order, no doubts need be entertained by those sending their orders to this firm that they will be faithfully attended to."

Quotations furnished on application. Shippers and others forwarding samples will have their value ascertained, and an offer made, if practicable.

With an experience of twenty years in merchandising in this city, we can offer the best facilities and references. jy22 3m

PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 13, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales gained. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Collegiate Institute,

AT BATON ROUGE, LA.

THE next session of this School will begin on Wednesday, the SIXTH OF OCTOBER, 1875. This is a family Boarding School for boys. The healthfulness of the location is unsurpassed. Instruction thorough in all that is necessary to prepare the student for any grade in college or any pursuit in life. Discipline parental. The constant personal care of the Principal is given to the health, morals and manners of the pupils.

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.,

THE Thirty-Fifth Session opens OCTOBER 4, 1875. Healthiest location in the South; superior advantages; thorough teaching; accomplished and experienced Faculty; imposing and commodious buildings; accessible to all points; elegant accommodation for pupils, and the cheapest first-class institution in the South. Charges greatly reduced, $161.25 for half session. Address

Wesleyan Female Instit'e,

STAUNTON, VA.,

WILL begin its Twenty-sixth annual session on SEPTEMBER 20, 1875. Rev. WM. A. Harris, D. D., President, with an able corps of twenty-three teachers and officers.

Modern Languages taught and spoken in the college by a European teacher. Music by seven professors and teachers.

This is one of the healthiest climates in the world. Those who come here from the South with feeble constitutions, chills and climatic diseases are entirely restored.

Buildings elegant, famed for the purest breezes, and commanding the most magnificent rural and mountain scenery, making it one of the most delightful college homes in the Union.

The past session this school was attended by pupils from seventeen different States.

Great economy and simplicity in dress are required. A simple uniform is worn. No unnecessary expense allowed, and none made without express instructions from parents. Strict economy practiced to keep all expenses of pupils within the lowest possible amount.

From Bishop E. M. Marvin, D. D.

"The Wesleyan Female Institute is an honor to the church. Instruction is thorough. All classes stand high. In music advantages are offered of a very high order."

Terms for Entire Collegiate Year.

Board and tuition in the collegiate course, including Ancient Languages, $210. Music and other extras moderate.

Scientific.

—At a recent meeting of the Physical Society of London a communication was read from Prof. Guthrie, in which he stated that, contrary to the general opinion, the minimum temperature to be obtained by mixing ice with a salt is independent of the ratio of the two—of their temperature, and of the state of division of the ice. The temperature of the mixture of ice and a salt is as constant and precise as the melting-point of ice. Among other interesting facts Prof. Guthrie mentioned that water saturated with ethyl ether solidified at 2° C., without separation of ether. The ice so formed may be ignited, and will burn with a colorless flame, the heat of which will do little more than melt the ice.

GOLD IN ARTIFICIAL GEMS.—Gold and its salts are employed in the preparation of artificial gems. In the artificial topaz one grain of gold in one thousand, with thirty or forty grains of antimony glass, has been detected. In the best specimens of the fictitious ruby we have a similar mixture, but the yellow is changed to red by remelting in the oxidizing flame of the blow-pipe. In the artificial amethyst and the Syrian garnet we have either the purple of Cassius with oxide of cobalt, or fulminating gold with antimony. The perfection of many of these fictitious gems is such as to deceive any but the most practiced eye. The great crucial test for gems—their hardness—can, however, soon decide between the genuine stone and the most perfect imitation, which after all is nothing but colored glass.

ORNAMENTAL CONDUCTORS.—The question is again agitated as to the reliability of lightning conductors, and which are the best kind. A newly completed house at Otis, Mass., was struck by lightning during a recent storm, and a carpenter instantly killed. The bolt was no doubt attracted by an iron casting around the top of the house, and when it descended the workmen, carpenters and painters were assembled in the large front room designed for the parlor, discussing the severity of the storm. Just as an allusion by one of them had been made to the absence of any lightning conductors on the building, a lurid streak struck the cupola, and seemed to fringe the whole structure with fire. It descended by the main staircase and wrecked everything in its way, all the men being stunned, and the carpenter was instantly killed, his body presenting a fearful sight, the flesh being shriveled and torn almost beyond recognition. The unfortunate man was at the time putting some tools away in his chest, which was completely demolished, and some of the tools melted. The fluid passed down the hole left for the furnace pipes, and by which the bell wires had been put up. It completely demolished the laundry and range, and finally made its exit out through the drain. The damage to the house will probably reach $2,500.

MUCH of the wisdom of one age is the folly of the next.

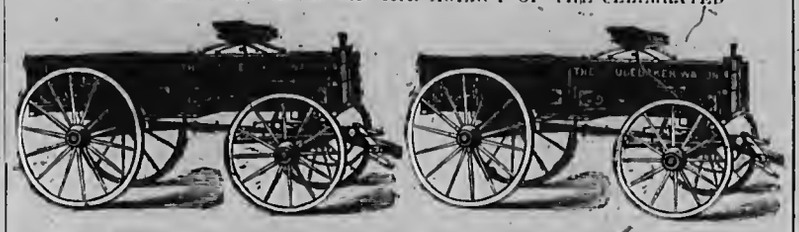
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample cent of roughly picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

New Orleans Markets.

From the New Orleans Price Current.

COTTON.—The sales on Tuesday embraced 367 bales, at irregular and rather weaker prices, requiring a reduction of ⅛c. in our inside figures for low middling and middling.

The demand was confined to a few buyers, and the sales were partly of new crop and partly of old. New crop middling sold at 14½c. The receipts of new crop embraced 13 bales, making a total to date of 342 bales, embracing 294 proper and 48 from Texas, against 302 last year, of which 284 proper and 18 from Texas. We quote:

Ordinary	11¼ @ 11½
Strict ordinary	11⅝ @ 12
Good ordinary	12⅛ @ 12⅝
Strict good ordinary	12⅝ @ 13
Low middling	13¼ @ 13¾
Strict low middling	13¾ @ 14
Middling	14⅛ @ 14⅜
Strict middling	14⅜ @ 14⅝

ALBANY has had her nobleman too—it was Count Barli. Of course he was a rogue in grain. By any name he did not smell as wheat, so when they detected his imposition he acknowledged the corn, and left to escape a thrashing.

A CLERICAL ERROR.—Mrs. Malaprop presents her compliments to Mr. Punch, and begs to be informed whether the children of poor curates may properly be classed among the surplice population.

TO SCOLD people when they make confessions is the way to prevent them from confessing again.

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

CAMP MEETING.—A camp meeting will be held at the Plaquemine Brulee camp ground, near Plaquemine Brulee church, Opelousas district, parish of St. Landry. The meeting will begin on Thursday, September 9, 1875. It will be strictly on the self-sustaining plan. Persons are expected to come prepared to take care of themselves. The public are cordially invited, and preachers solicited to be present. A large and commodious shed will have been erected for preaching purposes. There will be one or two tents where board may be obtained by visitors wishing it at the most reasonable rates. Ministers expecting to be present will please inform me as early as practicable. For further information address ROBERT S. ISBELL, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Rachliff's Mill, eleven miles north of Springville La., on the Springville circuit, Louisiana Conference, to commence on Friday, October 1, 1875. Ministers of the gospel are especially invited to attend. PHILIP ALLEN, P. C.

THE Garlandsville circuit camp meeting will be held at the new camp ground, near Hickory and Newton, Newton county, Miss., on the Brandon district, Mississippi Conference, September 10-14. It will be on the self-sustaining plan. Ministers who come by railroad will be conveyed from Hickory to the camp ground, and are invited to attend. WM. B. HINES, P. E.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Beulah camp ground, near Fort Jessup, La., commencing on the eighth day of October, 1875. The meeting will be on the self-supporting plan. Provision will be made especially for the preachers. Everybody is invited to attend our camp meeting. J. M. FRANKLIN, P. C.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

BOSTON, Sept. 1.—The increase in the value of foreign merchandise imported at Boston during the first eight months of the present year is upward of $2,000,000 as compared with the corresponding period last year, the total value being over $34,000,000. The total amount of gold received for duties, for the twelve months of 1874, was $14,806,628.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 1.—A dispatch from Tucson, Arizona, says a wealthy merchant of Tueson and naturalized citizen of Arizona went to Sonora to collect bills. He was arrested on a charge of furnishing arms to the Insurgents. There was no trial, but he was to pay $20,000 or be shot. His grave was dug, when a messenger arrived with the ransom. The roads are lined with refugees flying from the impending revolution.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 2.—Election returns to date are meager, but indicate that the Democrats elected their State ticket by a large majority. Houghton, Republican, and Luttrell, Democrat, for Congress, are probably elected for their respective districts—the third and fourth.

No returns have yet been received from the city precincts.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 3.—The opening of the Merchants' Exchange Bank and the prospect of the immediate resumption of the Bank of California inspire improved feeling in business circles. With the exception of the closing of the stock boards, business has practically settled to the usual routine.

Mr. Ralston's successor has not yet been named. At present D. O. Mills is at the head of affairs. The amount of new capital subscribed to date is $4,800,000.

Advices from Yokohama to the fourteenth ultimo report a heavy typhoon in the Chinese sea. Much damage done to shipping. The chief officer of the steamer Euclie and a seaman were washed overboard and drowned. The heavy rains damaged property in the central provinces of Japan over $2,000,000.

ATCHISON, KAN., Sept. 3.—There was a great celebration over the completion of the bridge over the Missouri. It is the largest known in this section of the country.

A train coming to the celebration ran off the track, and two persons were killed.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 4.—No further election returns have been received calculated to modify the previous reports. The Legislature is undoubtedly strongly Democratic.

Nothing new in financial or commercial circles. Quiet and confidence prevail.

NORFOLK, Sept. 4.—The Mercantile Bank of this city suspended this afternoon. It is claimed the assets will cover the liabilities.

PATERSON, N. J., Sept. 5.—Ballots for the constitutional amendments election in New Jersey, next Tuesday, were circulated at the Catholic churches in this city to-day, with several amendments crossed out. The erased amendments prohibit the appropriation of public money and lands to private or sectarian purposes, guarantee a system of public schools, and prohibit special legislation.

OKMULGEE CREEK, Creek Nation, via Muskogee, I. T., Sept. 5.—The Grand Council of Indian Territory is in session. A full delegation is in attendance from nearly every tribe in the Territory. An extra delegation, as visitors, from the Kiowas, Comanches and other wild tribes from the plains, are also present. The only business to be considered is the new constitution providing for Governor of the Territory, United States courts and a delegate to Congress, which will probably pass this convention, but with a proviso that it be submitted to the National Councils for approval.

CLINTON, September 6.—A Radical meeting, twelve hundred strong, was held here last Saturday. Not more than fifty white men were on the grounds, and half of them unarmed. A personal difficulty occurred on the outside of the crowd. The negroes, led by their leaders, rushed to the rescue, when the firing commenced. Three whites were killed and six wounded, including Charles N. Chilton, a prominent merchant of the place, who was killed in his own yard. About forty negroes have been killed and many wounded. The whites hold possession of the town and the negroes have scattered in all directions. The leaders are said to be in Jackson. The Governor has called on the chairman of the Democratic executive committee to assist in restoring peace. All quiet at this time, ten P. M.

MONTGOMERY, Sept. 6.—The Alabama Constitutional Convention met to-day. Gen. L. Pope Walker, the first Secretary of War of the Confederate States, was chosen president by acclamation, the Republicans and Democrats all voting for him. His father was president of the convention which adopted the constitution in 1819, under which Alabama was admitted into the Union.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Sept. 1.—A Times special from Buda Pesth says trustworthy information from Bosnia represents that the insurgents did not cross the Austrian frontier—have submitted to Pasha Khan Jalansky. Bosnia may be regarded as pacified.'

A Times Berlin dispatch says that after the recent appointment of Malmoud Pasha as Grand Vizier there is less hope than ever of the insurgents coming to terms. Malmoud Pasha is regarded as the champion of absolute government, and is well calculated to make the insurgents desperate.

His appointment, unless mere caprice, is proof that the Sultan is determined to maintain the system which has produced the present outbreak.

MONTREAL, Sept. 2.—This afternoon the members of the Institute Canadian and their friends, numbering some three hundred, accompanied the body of Gutbord from the Protestant cemetery vaults and reached the Catholic cemetery gates at three P. M.

In the meantime about five hundred French Canadians had assembled. The hearse moved off amid the derisive cheers of the multitude. After the hearse drove off the crowd began to disperse. Several fights took place during the afternoon, but the injuries done were of a slight character. It is not known whether an attempt will be made tomorrow to bury the body or not.

LONDON, Sept. 3.—A special telegram from Constantinople to the Times states that Serva Pasha has been instructed to issue a proclamation, on his arrival at Mostar, giving assurances that henceforward no vexatious or illegal acts will be permitted in the name of the government. He has also been directed to dismiss and punish all officials guilty of oppressing the people; to institute a special tribunal, which shall examine and satisfy the demands of those who have been objects of arbitrary treatment; to recall any persons exiled without just cause, and expel agitators. He is authorized to employ all necessary means to execute these instructions.

The Porte, while determined to repress the insurrection at all cost, intends to extirpate the abuses likely to lead to its repetition.

The Standard's special dispatch from Constantinople represents that the insurrection in Herzegovina is now maintained by bands of robbers. Not a single insurgent is to be seen around Trebigne. The fugitive insurgents have driven eighteen thousand head of cattle into Dalmatia for security.

MADRID, Sept. 6.—Numbers of Carlists in all parts of Catalonia, Navarre and the Biscayan provinces are giving in their submission to the government of King Alfonso and asking for amnesty.

MADRID, Sept. 7.—The Carlist Gen. Dorregaray, pursued by the royal forces, has passed through Roncal with one thousand five hundred men. He has lost all his war material. Subsequently he reached Burgueto.

The Biscayans are renewing manifestations in behalf of peace, and refuse to pay the taxes levied by the Carlists. Rumors of negotiations for peace gain credence.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 7.—Order has again been completely established in Bosnia and is almost restored in Herzegovina.

Trouble with the Negroes.

Considerable excitement, says the Southern Christian Advocate of September 1, has been produced in the State of Georgia by the discovery of preparations among the colored people of several counties to massacre the whites. The press of the State has teemed with the details of this diabolical scheme; and while attempts have been made abroad to argue from its frustration that there was no ground for the "scare," it is certain that only the promptness and discretion with which the movement was met saved the threatened sections from such scenes as it is sickening even to think of. From perfectly reliable sources we learn that the negro population of several counties had been inveigled by a few turbulent leaders of their own color into a project for the indiscriminate murder of the white people of that section. Upon the discovery of the vile design, measures to defeat it were promptly adopted and successfully carried out, so that all apprehension of serious trouble has passed away. Gov. Smith has visited the locality of the troubles, and the legal investigation will be conducted under the guidance of ex-Gov. Herschel V. Johnson, within whose judicial jurisdiction they have arisen. There seems to be no doubt that the great mass of the negroes have been the ignorant dupes of a few restless spirits, and that the arrest and punishment of these will satisfy the claims of justice and secure the future quiet of the disturbed communities. The self-restraint and forbearance of the white people, under the exasperating provocation of such a gross assault upon their peace and welfare, has been most admirable, and cannot be too highly commended. So far as we have learned, there has been no instance of violence, and though arrests have been numerous, the offenders have been delivered up to the authorities to await the award of the court. This is as it should be, and is a most effective refutation of malignant misrepresentations of the law-abiding character of the people of the State.

From the Work.

BRANDON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference for Brandon district was held at Mutual Union, Scott county, August 26-29. In the absence of a Bishop our worthy and beloved presiding elder, Rev. William B. Hines, took the chair. The writer was elected secretary, assisted by Rev. Irvin Miller. The attendance was good. All the pastors were present except three. Nearly all the other members were also present.

After the organization of the Conference the reports of the pastors were received. The inquiry into the spiritual condition, finances and Sunday schools was thorough, and it affords us great pleasure to state that most of the reports were very encouraging. There had been revival meetings in almost every circuit, and quite a number had found peace with God which passeth all understanding, and were added to the church. It has never before been our good fortune to attend a District Conference where its members were so wonderfully revived. Truly God was with us and dwelt among us, and we felt that it was good to be there. One could not expect to attend many such meetings as we have had in a life-time. We hope and pray that God will wonderfully bless the Brandon district this year. The following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, It is the intention of the General Conference to make the District Conference a means of general inquiry into the workings of our glorious Methodism, and it has proved a success in regard to itinerants; therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of this District Conference that our local brethren be required to report their labors and experience as far as possible.

We were highly edified by the preaching, and much gratified with the cordial and fraternal hospitality extended by the citizens of Mutual Union and vicinity. Dr. Andrews, president of Centenary College, Jackson, La., was with us, preaching and looking after the interests of his school. Centenary, Whitworth and East Mississippi Female Colleges were all recommended to our people—and they were urged to patronize them—as was also your valuable paper, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

On Sabbath, after the eleven o'clock service, the sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered to a large number of communicants, who seemed to enter fully into the spirit of the occasion.

Our delegates elected to the Annual Conference are: Rev. W. D. King, W. M. Thornton, Judge J. W. McMaster and J. H. Hood. Alternates—Rev. Irvin Miller, D. M. Wormack and W. C. Dowd.

Newton was the place selected to hold the next District Conference.

W. M. THORNTON, Sec.

PEA RIVER MISSION, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: I have just closed my third protracted meeting on this work. I found a large field of labor (three or four small churches,) with but little religion—almost none at all, yet a territory up and down the Pea river with hundreds of people on the road to hell. I must say that this has been one of the hardest years of my itinerant life. Amid all the hardships and discouragements I have tried to move forward in the cause of my Master. With the assistance of my elder I am yet holding on. God has blessed my labors, I have organized four new churches, and we now have six. I am just from a very interesting meeting which lasted four days. I commenced a meeting on the second Sunday in this month, which lasted ten days. I never attended a more interesting meeting in my life. We had the best order from the first of the meeting to the last. The church was densely crowded every night, and a great many out of doors. There were several who professed religion, and twenty new accessions. The meeting was held at what is called Dr. Renald's school-house. We have a membership there of forty. There have been more than thirty accessions within the last few weeks on this mission. We have three new church buildings now on hand. The people here are well able to build good churches, and to give their preacher a good support. Methodism is looking up in this country. I am striking at the strongest points or communities, organizing churches where there is material to work on. We are getting some of the best material of this country into the church, and converted at that.

J. M. BROWN, P. C.

AUGUST 24, 1875.

CATAHOULA PARISH, LA.—Mr. Editor: The Chickasaw creek runs through the northwestern corner of Catahoula parish, La. It is a tributary of Castor bayou, and Castor bayou a tributary of Little river. About a mile north of the creek our enterprising citizen, Mr. C. P. Kees, has erected a store. The Masons also have a nice hall there. These, with the school-house not far off, are called Missionary Ridge. In the bottoms near the creek are many good and well-cultivated farms, while the hills are mostly unfit for cultivation, and are covered with tall pine trees.

The people of this vicinity have employed Prof. Holloman to teach for them this year. After their school began it was apparent to the patrons that it was as necessary to train the moral faculties of their children as their intellectual. A Sunday school was organized, with the understanding that no sectarian creeds should be discussed, and that the session should close in three months. On the first Sunday in this month arrangements had been made for staying at the school-house all day. Early in the morning little groups of children and grown people could be seen going to the school-house. The day was spent in the usual Sunday school exercises and singing. Many were the notes of praise that arose from a group of happy youths on that day. Our school, which is made up of members of several denominations, is prospering.

JAS. W. BALDRIDGE, Supt.

AUGUST 25, 1875.

GENEVA, ALABAMA CONFERENCE. Mr. Editor: It has pleased God to revive his work again in Geneva circuit, at the old camp ground church, in Coffee county, Ala., where we have just closed a week's meeting. We had a glorious time. The gospel proved the power of God unto the salvation of a number of souls. Eighteen joined the church. This is the place where hundreds, no doubt, have been converted, and some of them are among the stars of our Conference, who stand upon the walls of Zion.

We held our third Quarterly Conference in this place on the seventh and eighth of August, where our presiding elder, Bro. M. E. Batt, preached to the satisfaction of an attentive congregation.

JOHN A. GREEN, P. C.

GENEVA, ALA., August 9, 1875.

ALEXANDRIA CIRCUIT, NORTH ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: We held a meeting at Webster chapel last week. This is a new place. The house is a two-story frame building, just finished. The people made the offering to the Lord, and the Holy Ghost sealed the gift in the happy conversion of some thirty-one persons. There were twenty-two accessions to our church. We commenced in the woods, three years ago, by organizing with some nineteen members; now we have forty-seven on the roll.

R. G. RAGAN.

AUGUST 31, 1875.

Rev. J. W. Shores.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the third Quarterly Conference of the Sepulga circuit, Prattville district, Alabama Conference, held at Asbury church, Conecuh county, August 18, 1875:

Whereas, We are informed by Bro. J. M. Scott, preacher in charge, that the absence of our presiding elder, Bro. J. W. Shores, is caused by a very serious accident which befell him on the sixth instant, in which he was thrown from his buggy, breaking one leg between the foot and knee, and injuring the hip very badly on the other side; and as, to all human appearances, his recovery will be slow and tedious, attended with much pain and suffering:

Resolved, That we extend to Bro. Shores the assurance that he shares largely in the tenderest sympathies of our hearts, and that we will remember him in our prayers, that he may have the consolations of the love and grace of Jesus, and that our heavenly Father may bless these afflictions to his and our good.

Resolved, That we extend to him all the material aid that we can, and would call the attention of every charge in this district to this point especially, that he and his family may be relieved from the additional suffering of the lack of those things needful for the body.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Bro. Shores, and that we request their publication in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

J. M. SCOTT, Chairman.
W. R. CHAPMAN, Sec.

Wesleyan Methodist Conference.

The one hundred and thirty-second annual session of the Wesleyan Conference opened in Carver Street chapel, Sheffield, England, July 28, Rev. Dr. Punshon in the chair. Among those present on the platform were Bishop Simpson, Revs. G. T. Perks, J. Farrar, W. Stamp, J. Lomas, Dr. Jobson, the representatives of the French and Irish Conferences. The body of the chapel was occupied by the chairmen of the districts, and the aisles and front pews of the gallery were filled with ministers, nearly eight hundred tickets having been issued. The president gave out the hymn beginning,

"And are we still alive,
And see each other's faces?"

which was followed by a prayer by the ex-president. The secretary announced that eight vacancies had occurred in the Legal Hundred during the last year. Of these four were filled by election on the ground of seniority—Revs. William Bond, William Lindley, Thomas Wood and G. F. White. The remainder were selected by nomination, by those ministers who had traveled ten years and upward, from those who had traveled fourteen years and upward, the Legal Hundred being requested to elect persons so nominated—Revs. James Clapham, Samuel Davies, F. Greeves and Thomas McCullough. The Conference then proceeded to the election of the president. The votes were as follows: Gervase Smith, 274; A. McAuley, 94; W. B. Pope, 49; Dr. Rigg, 28; Samuel Coley, 16. The Hundred sent up their votes and Rev. Gervase Smith was declared to be president of the Wesleyan Conference. The ex-president (Dr. Punshon) then rose and said:

"To none in this Conference would I more cheerfully resign the simple badges of this office, and by none will they be more worthily received. You succeed to a heritage of great influence and power, which has been honored and hallowed by the blessing of God. Your duties will be arduous—far too arduous, I will venture now to say. You will be sustained by the thought that you are working for God—working for the truest brotherhood in the world, and sustained by their prayers. It is with sincere pleasure that I hand to you the Bible of our founder, which he personally used, and which contains and is the word of God. On that we take our stand, and by that we are willing to be judged. I am thankful it is out of my hands, and pray that the blessing of God may come down upon you, and crown you 'with the Holy Ghost and with fire.'"

Mr. Smith thanked the Conference from his heart for the vote which had been given. He then said:

"Until the last few hours he could scarcely have thought that such an honor would have been conferred upon him. It seemed to him that he was not made of the material out of which presidents ought to be made. He was born in an obscure hamlet in Derbyshire, and he spent his childhood in scenes and associations in the hill country. He had never used the language of courtiers, and he had never sought the favor of men, either of ministers or laymen. His wish and his endeavor had been to be a simple, straightforward and hard-working Methodist preacher. He took that seal and those badges of office from the hands of his illustrious predecessor, his life-long and unfailing friend, to whom his very soul was linked. He could not but feel that he had many hallowed associations in that place and in that town. Thirty-six years ago he came as a student to Wesley College. More than twenty-five years ago he gained a spiritual victory in one of the pews near the platform, the influence of which had followed him to that hour. He preached his trial sermon from the pulpit behind him; he was examined in the room close by as a candidate for the Methodist ministry; and he hoped it was not beneath his dignity to say that he was the first 'old boy' of the Wesley College that had gained a distinction like the one which had just been conferred upon him. He said the past year would open up a new chapter in the history of British nonconformists. It mattered very little to him whether he was called 'reverend' or not, but it mattered a great deal to be told that he had no ministerial call or character. He had no quarrel with the Church of England. He venerated the massive theology which that church had given to Christendom; but there was very little insight required to see that the greatest enemies to the church were not outside, but within its pale, and it required no prophet's eye to see that the priestly rule which was being brought to bear upon them at this moment in some parts of the country was doing a great deal to bring that institution to the very verge of ruin. After all, the great want of 1875 was the want of 1820—the 'Liverpool Minutes,' so called, told them that the great want at that time was the gift of the Holy Ghost. He did not believe that persons putting their names on the class-books would give great help to Methodism in any form whatever. If men did not come into the class meetings baptized in spiritual influence they would do them more harm than good. He held that Methodism was called to bear witness to the personal work of the Holy Ghost."

"I DECLARE," said Susan, as she watched the people coming into church, "that man looks like a piece of dried beef." "Hush," said her sister; "it isn't meet in you to talk so."

Books and Periodicals.

THE NEW TESTAMENT. With Notes and Comments, Accompanied with Maps and Illustrations. By Rev. Lyman Abbott. Matthew and Mark. A. S. Barnes & Co., New York and Chicago, 1875.

The form and size of this volume, and its arrangement and typography, are excellent. The text is in very small letter, but clear, and the comments in larger letter, in double columns. There is a valuable introduction treating on the New Testament canon, principles of interpretation and kindred topics. The illustrations are not numerous nor striking, but they are well executed and helpful to the reader. We have not thoroughly examined the comments, but, so far as we have been able to sample them, we have been favorably impressed. We are indebted to the publishers for a copy.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR. By L. O. Emerson and W. S. Tilden. Boston: Oliver, Ditson & Co.

This is a book of studies and recreations for advanced singing classes. It contains an excellent selection of songs, and is a work of merit.

WARE'S VALLEY MONTHLY for September is an excellent number. It has: The Poets of the West, Thoughts on Woman's Work, Tennyson's Queen Mary, The Southwest and its Metropolis, The Ministry of Nature, Gen. Sherman and the Laws of War, and other articles, besides voluminous editorial matter on political, ecclesiastical, educational, scientific and literary subjects. Charles E. Ware & Co., publishers, St. Louis, Mo. Price, $3 a year.

ST. NICHOLAS for September has been received. It is splendidly illustrated, and contains a wonderful variety of entertaining and useful reading for the young folks. We have the Squirrel's Stratagem, Dressed in White, Tony's First Stilts, Some Queer Dishes, The Cyclops, An Indian Story, That Bird, and many other fine things.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for September has: Mose Underwood, Glimpses of Polynesia, The Atonement of Leam Dundas, Camp-Fire Lyrics, Our Architectural Future, The Hospice of the Great St. Bernard, and other articles.

WE ARE INDEBTED to Rev. Robert A. Young, D. D., for a form of statistical report for Annual Conferences. It is the best form we have seen, and would be perfect if there were in it provision for our method of raising the Conference fund.

WE HAVE RECEIVED Wide Awake No. 3. It is, as usual, handsomely illustrated, and abounds in articles suited to entertain and instruct the young. D. Lathrop & Co., publishers, Boston. Price, $2 per year.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for September has: Chicago, illustrated, The Cross of Cadmon, A Farmer's Vacation, The Story of Seven Oaks, The Cold Snap, How the Declaration was Saved, and other articles.

SUMAC LEAVES is the title of a beautiful journal published by the young ladies of the Feliciana Female Collegiate Institute, Jackson, La. We are indebted to the fair publishers for a copy.

Death of Rev. John Rudin.

In accordance with a vote of the board of directors of the Scandinavian Seamen's Friend Society, passed at their last regular meeting on Thursday evening, September 2, the following preamble and resolutions are published:

Whereas, Our heavenly Father has removed from his work on earth, to that "rest that remaineth for the people of God," our beloved brother, Rev. John Rudin; therefore, be it

Resolved, That by this dispensation of an all-wise Providence we are bereft of our most zealous and efficient co-laborer, the Scandinavian Seamen's Friend Society of its warmest friend and most active supporter, and the sailors, in whose interest he was so diligently laboring, of a most self-denying benefactor.

Resolved, That while we know not where to find a worthy successor to our late chaplain, we can confidently commit the cause in which his last days were spent to that Savior in whose presence he now rejoices, assured that in his own good time he will send one who shall build upon the foundation so successfully laid by Bro. Rudin.

Resolved, That while to the widow and fatherless children left thus desolate by our chaplain's decease we tender our heartfelt sympathy, we can bid them cherish as a priceless legacy the memory of a husband and father whose constant purpose was to faithfully serve his divine Redeemer.

In behalf of the board.

BLIGHT—BLOOM.

BY ISADORE C. GILBERT.

Life hath its barren years,
When blossoms fall untimely down;
When ripened fruitage fails to crown
The summer toil; when nature's frown
Looks only on our tears.

Life hath its faithless days,
The golden promise of a morn
That seemed for light and gladness born
Meant only noontide wreck and scorn,
Hushed harp instead of praise.

Life hath its valleys too,
Where we must walk with vain regret,
With mourning clothed, with wild rain wet,
Toward sunlight hopes that soon may set
All quenched in pitying dew.

Life hath its harvest crooos,
Its tasseled corn and purple-weighted vine;
'Its gathered sheaves of grain, the blessed sign
Of plenteous reaping, bread and pure rich wine
Full hearts for harvest times.

Life hath its hopes fulfilled;
Its glad fruitions, its blest answered prayer,
Sweeter for waiting long, whose holy air,
Indrawn to silent souls, breathes forth in rare
Grand speech, by joy distilled.

Life hath its Tabor heights;
Its lofty mounts of heavenly recognition,
Whose unveiled glories flash to earth munition
Of love and truth, and clearer intuition.
Hail! mount of all delights!

The Alliance.

Able Ministers.

Very able men for the work of the service of the house of God.—First Chronicles ix. 13.

God's work requires able men. Power must be applied adequate to the resistance. Is it not so in the realm of moral influences and exertions? To repress the evil propensities of the young and to train them into goodness, to allure the wanderer from the paths of vice, to win the human soul to holiness and to God, is no easy task. Mind is more difficult to operate upon than matter—more mysterious and less certainly calculable. The sculptor may take the rough block of marble and cut out of it the form and features of a man—there is no resistance. But to descend into the human quarry—to bring up the animate block of filth and pollution, and shape it into the form and similitude of a man after Christ's own heart—needs ability. The open sea of argument may be passed, conviction may be secured, but the rocks and shoals, and shifting channels of passion, disposition and habit remain. Our work is not like that of a gardener, who simply takes the young plant to train and nurture. It is like that of a nurse, who takes the sickly child, battles with disease, endeavors to restore health, and under every disadvantage labors to introduce it to happy life and useful work. Human depravity is the real root of the difficulty experienced in all attempts to persuade men to virtue and godliness. The power of the Holy Ghost, exercised in man's restoration and sanctification, is absolutely necessary. In the effectuation of this, not ignorance, feebleness and incapacity are required in the human agents employed, but "very able men," who are acquainted with man's nature, with the moral disease, with the grand remedy which the grace and mercy of God has provided, and who possess skill to apply it to the varied forms and phases assumed by the deadly malady. This work is worthy of the consecration of the noblest powers, for it contemplates the noblest ends. They are the ends of Christian benevolence—compassionating those who are sunk in degradation, descending to the lowest depths to lift the sinner to purity and heaven. They would promote the highest good and impart the greatest blessings. Their aims are not confined to time and earth, but to fill all time and eternity with priceless trophies. Beneath the shadow of a Savior's cross, with his love burning in the heart, with the word of command ringing in the ear, no ability, however great, seems too great to consecrate to his service. Consider what illustrious examples there have been in the world. Believing that the Son of God in human flesh became the sacrifice for sin, and that the Holy Ghost works in the hearts of men, they carried the glad news to a sick and dying world. Apostles, martyrs, ministers and saints form the noble army of "very able men," who lived and used their ability in the Lord's service. But, says some young preacher, as the deeds of these "able men" are recounted: "What achievements have I won? Where is my success?" What do you mean, my young brother, by achievements and success? Kings and grandees have not doffed their plumes before you; bells and bonfires have not spread your fame; the great congregation has not burdened you with acclamations, approbation and praise; you have not ushered in a Pentecost; sinners do not sway and fall at the sound of your voice, nor has every battle been a triumph. Is that the pitiful wailing that leaps over the noisy precincts of your heart, that sits pictured on your brow? My brother, you are worshiping the unknown god of success. You entered the service to work! You must, therefore, do it, and God will take care of the results. "O!" says another, "If I could but preach as a certain D. D. preaches I would be satisfied." If you would copy Christ it would be far better. Still I would remind you, for your encouragement, that that certain D. D. once could not say the alphabet! From the manger to Calvary, from Calvary to the crown—step by step, my brother. The old philosopher, while gazing intently at the stars, found himself suddenly precipitated into a treacherous well. While you aim at high things—elevated position—look well to the groundwork—look out for the wells. It is so in aesthetics. The sculptor does not turn out a statue fit for park or museum out of his first block, nor does the young artist take his first brush and pigment and dash off a Madonna. In the church there is work for all. Very few men are qualified to fill all the various positions. But if we cannot all be a Wesley or a Bascom, let us not despair; we may be a Carvosso or a John Newton. If we cannot fill a city pulpit, we can stand on the rude log rostrum in the backwoods, and preach Christ crucified. Therefore, my young brethren in the service, we may be "very able men" in that department. Let us ever keep before our mind's eye the precious fact that "the pearl of great price," whether inclosed in a bundle of homespun or carefully wrapped in broadcloth, is of the same value to our Master. With these thoughts as a precedent, let us work on, and soon ampler opportunities will be afforded us—avenues of access and palms of success will be ours. Let us tread our way unostentatiously through the labyrinths of obscurity and present subordination, firmly grasping the paternal hand of God, and sing ever:

"He leadeth me! Oh! blessed thought,
Oh! words with heavenly rapture fraught:
Whate'er I do, where'er I be,
Still 'tis God's hand that leadeth me."

This work promises the most splendid rewards. Not, perhaps, the reward of a sounding fame or a growing fortune; yet it is a rich reward. To know that our heavenly Father smiles approvingly upon us is no small solace and reward amidst the arduousness of the work. But this is only an instalment. When the evening of life comes, and our work is done, we shall go home to rest. Yes, the chariot and horsemen shall descend, we shall mount up, the pearly gates shall flash back, and we shall go "sweeping through the gates, washed in the blood of the Lamb." And when he shall come again in his glory he will give the full reward. O the joyful coronation amidst the plaudits of all heaven! Great ability or small, if faithfully employed, will receive the crowning encomium of the Master: "Well done, good and faithful servant." O that Methodism could count her able men by thousands! May God raise them up. C.

ROCHESTER, August 17, 1875.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy.

MR. EDITOR: At a meeting of the board of trustees of the Port Gibson Collegiate Academy, August 21, 1875, it was resolved to make the following address to the public, in behalf of the academy, through our Conference organ, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE:

The Port Gibson Collegiate Academy is now one of the oldest female academies in the State, and has been under the patronage of the Mississippi Annual Conference more than thirty years, during which period it has had many years of decided prosperity, and has contributed largely to the educational interests both of the church and country.

In 1854 it received an excellent charter from the State Legislature, and was legally incorporated. In 1869 the entire property was presented to the Mississippi Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, in fee simple, upon the single condition that the Conference would perpetually keep up a school on the premises for the white race. The property is worth from $15,000 to $20,000, is eligibly located on a large and beautiful lot in the most desirable portion of the town, with commodious brick buildings, well arranged for all academic purposes.

About one year ago we succeeded in securing the services of Rev. John A. B. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, a man we believe every way worthy and well qualified to be at the head of such an institution as we intend this to be. One year's successful administration under innumerable discouragements, growing out of the prostrated finances of the country, has fully satisfied us that we have been very fortunate in the selection of our president. He is ably assisted by Misses Eugenia W. and Matilda J. Jones; both graduates of this academy in its palmiest days, and both now well experienced teachers, capable of instructing in any branch necessary to an honorable graduation. Other teachers are engaged, who will be added to the faculty as the interests of the academy require. The musical department has the services of Miss Belle T. Tilden, a graduate of the renowned institution of Mrs. Tevis, Shelbyville, Ky., who, in addition to a fine musical taste and education, has the experience of several years of successful teaching.

The boarding department is under the personal supervision of Mrs. John A. B. Jones, which is a guarantee that the health, comfort and happiness of those under her care will be secured as far as possible.

Our object is to keep up a home institution equal to any in the State or elsewhere; but in order to do this—as our academy is not endowed—our patronage must be greatly enlarged. While we do not wish to interfere with the legitimate patronage of our other denominational schools, there are large sections of our country that should be prompted by local pride, self-interest, convenience and economy to patronize the Collegiate Academy. All the counties of southwestern Mississippi, the river parishes of Louisiana and the southeastern counties of Arkansas should become supporters of this institution. Any person who can get to the Mississippi river can reach this place by public conveyance—steamboats to Grand Gulf, railroad to Port Gibson.

We need say nothing of the beauty and general good health of our inland city, or the intelligence, refinement and morality of our citizens, with all our social and church privileges; for these are facts too well known to need any further advertisement.

The next collegiate year of forty weeks begins September 15, 1875. For further particulars we refer you to the published circular of the president, or request you to address him by letter at this place.

We not only invoke the aid of the ministers, members and patrons of our church, but that of a generous and patriotic public, to assist us in filling our academic halls with the rising hope of our country. Remember that the educated classes are either directly or indirectly the ruling classes everywhere. Give your daughters, then, an opportunity of turning the cultivated talents of their sex to the present and future good of our country.

A Broken Sabbath.

There is wisdom and authority in the commandment: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy"—wisdom in that men and animals need the rest. Body and brain need the rest, and both man and beast will last longer, and do more work in life with this rest than without it; authority in it, because God commands it; and God's commandments are not to be disregarded with impunity.

The observing of this rest seems to have God's blessing, and its disregard God's curse. Compare the quarters of the globe that observe the Sabbath with those quarters that do not—say Europe and America with Asia and Africa. Europe, with its intellectuality, and America, with its energy, almost infinitely surpass Asia, with its teeming millions, and Africa, notwithstanding its wonderful opportunities. Africa has had Egyptian art, or Grecian refinement, or Roman letters, or Christian fires on all of her borders, from the cradle of the human family till the present; and yet, rejecting Christianity and the Sabbath, what is she? What a terrible condition, intellectually and morally, she is in still! In all that renders life desirable and happy, Europe and America are to Asia and Africa as heaven to hell.

This difference is also seen if we compare States that observe the Sabbath with those that do not, or families that do with those that do not, or individuals that do with those that do not. Now and then there may seem to be an exception, but on careful observation it will be found that real and permanent prosperity, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, is with the Sabbath-observing.

In the Bible scores of passages speak of the Sabbath, and often national and individual prosperity were to depend on its observance; hence we infer that God notes the observance or non-observance of his day, and acts accordingly. We do not know what might be the prosperity of a nation or city or community or individual if by each or either of them the Sabbath should be strictly observed; and if, with our carelessly-observed Sabbaths we have so much prosperity, what might be our cup of blessings if to each of us the Sabbath was indeed "holy" and "a delight?"

God gave laws to one nation, and in that code the keeping holy the Sabbath had a prominent place; and a broken Sabbath, to the man who picked up sticks on that day, was the privilege of being stoned to death. Tried, condemned and executed by the strictness of this law, who among us would not long since have been sent to meet the Lawgiver, where days and nights are not measured by sun, moon or stars?

My Experience.

MR. EDITOR: It has been my unspeakable pleasure to attend three consecutive camp meetings at the delightful Seashore, where I heard more wonderful and powerful preaching than I had ever heard, and I rejoice to know that it has been owned and blessed of God in the conversion of sinners and the building up of the church. It is wonderful that the coast is not all morally revolutionized; but we hope and believe that the seed is taking root, and will spring up and bear good fruit. It cannot fail. But the most enjoyable part of it to me was the experiences of those men and women of God—some who had just entered the race and in their first love; babes in Christ; young men and women strong in God; fathers who had borne the burden and heat of the day; then the ministers. O how rejoiced we were to see and hear the young coming forward to take up the weapons of those who have fought to the death, crying, "Victory!" and those who—battle-worn, worn out, bearing in their body the marks of the Lord Jesus—still linger to urge and encourage and shout on the battle. With great difficulty we restrained ourselves from trying to tell of the divine power that snatched a brand from the fire; but, fearing that our impaired voice could not be heard by the great assembly, thus occupying the time that would be otherwise taken up to edification and to our comfort, we with some regret mingled with joy at the testimony of others. We propose by this mode, with your approbation, to send you our EXPERIENCE NO. I.

My early history is found in the parable of the prodigal, only that when, in a foreign country, I came to myself and arose to go to my father (to return to my native land and to my earthly father,) and to give my best service to my heavenly Father, I again met with a little success; and, having regained bodily strength when almost at the threshold, through shame I turned back, determined to go on when I should be in a better moral condition. But, alas! my condition became worse, and my earthly father fell asleep in Jesus and I never saw him again. But, thank God, I have returned to my heavenly Father, and found forgiveness through the blood of the atoning Lamb; and now, after serving God imperfectly for thirty-seven years, in feebleness I am waiting by the river and trying to be patient, and to do whatsoever my hand findeth to do, that I may glorify him by life or by death. Yours in Christ,

J. NICHOLSON.

Hiwassee College.

MR. EDITOR: We know you are a lover of Methodist institutions and all of her appendages; and as Hiwassee College holds a prominent position among many Southern colleges of our church, we desire to inform the people concerning her real value. Hiwassee College is located about fifty miles below Knoxville, seven miles from Sweetwater, amid the picturesque scenes of the minor mountains of east Tennessee. We might denominate this college a rural college. We are free from the bustle of trains and other things which impede education, found in cities. To those from a more southerly country, how beautiful is bold nature to the eye! How mindful does it make us of the "Geographical Description of Switzerland!"

Our session opened on the second of this month. We have ten States represented at this time. We have an able and fatherly president, and three very competent teachers. This is the place for the rich and the poor. We have excellent fare. The people can afford to board very cheap—they raise very nearly everything at home. Good board can be had for $11 a month, including washing, fuel and rooms furnished. Those of limited means can "bachelor" on $5 a month, including everything. We have two fine debating societies, and a good library of about fourteen hundred books. We can say that it is the determination of the greater part of boys of this college to be useful to the world.

We will gladly welcome any one in our midst whose desire is to obey our rules and join in with us in the Herculean task to strive for knowledge and wisdom. INMAN.

A SCHOOL BOY has put on paper the fact that he would "rather be a little girl and obey his mother than be a dog and obey the moon."

OBITUARIES.

DIED, at his residence in Perry county, Ala., November 1, 1874, after many days' sickness and infirmity of age, JOHN THOMAS, SR., aged seventy-four years, ten months and twenty-seven days.

The deceased was born in Newberry district, S. C., in 1799, and moved to Alabama in 1818, and there resided until his death. He was by occupation a farmer, and in his quiet, peaceful pursuits of life he made many friends, was a substantial citizen, his house was the home of the minister, had raised a large family, and lived to see his youngest child the head of a family.

In 1820 he was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Miss Demphey Poole, of Jefferson county, Ala., and lived a long, happy wedded life, performing the duties of husband to wife for fifty-four years.

In 1822 he professed a hope in the triumphant faith of Christ, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Mount Hermon, where his membership remained unto his death. For fifty-two years he was a faithful worker in Christ's vineyard. During this long period his name was never erased from the church or class-book; but, on the contrary, he was always regarded as a zealous member. Truly it can be said of him: His last days were his happiest, and the most refreshing seasons of his religious enjoyment. The older he grew the stronger his faith became of soon realizing the promises of God and the joys of heaven.

It was the pleasure of the writer to be present at the last love-feast he ever attended, and to witness his expressed hope and faith in Jesus, and the strong faith that had so long strengthened his hope of meeting his God in peace. He said he had been trying to serve his Maker for fifty-two years, had never regretted he had taken up his cross and followed Christ's teachings, and had never felt willing to turn back from the path of duty; he had but a few days longer on earth, and by faith he hoped to die the death of the righteous.

God had blessed him with a happy family of children, but in his wise dispensation three of them were made angels while infants. The others lived to grow into man and womanhood. It was the same Omnipotent hand of him who "doeth all things well" that bereft this family of four sons. The father bowed in humble submission to the will of him on high, resting in the hope of meeting them in the realms above. In his death he leaves a companion and six surviving children to mourn the loss of husband and father.

S. C. TRAMILL.

LILLIAN LEITH died at her uncle's, near Memphis, on the seventh of August, but her parents brought her remains to Brandon for interment. No matter where they may be called in their future fields of labor, the little mound raised in our cemetery was raised in our hearts, and there is no one among us, irrespective of denomination, that does not feel it his sacred privilege to care for and lavish tears and flowers on that spot! She attended Sunday school regularly, and always blessed her teacher with a sunny smile and a perfect lesson, and on several occasions has beautifully related to her little companions the stories from the Child's Corner of the ADVOCATE that her mother had read to her the week before.

Lillian was the community's pet! On our Christmas tree of 1874 there were more presents for her than any two others of our school; and to show you how sweet and generous she was, the morning after she selected some of her prettiest, costliest toys and sent them to her cousins in Alabama.

The first part of this summer she had a lingering spell of typhoid fever, and every one was so anxious about her that it seemed a public affliction. All kinds of delicacies, fruits and flowers found their way to her room, and so much company that the physician forbade it. As soon as she was well enough her mother took her on a visit to her uncle. Every letter told of her gaining health and strength, and the time appointed for their return was near at hand, when, alas! Bro. Leith received a telegraphic dispatch saying that Lillian was dangerously ill; and so it proved, for she lived only a few minutes after he arrived. I have often thought, since then, of the mercy of our Father in sparing her to make this visit to relatives that had never known and loved her as we do. And who knows but her mission there was to win hearts for God?—for often "the touch of a child's hand has opened many a door through which the Master has afterward come in, sat down and supped."

There was every tribute of love and respect shown that devoted, sympathetic hearts could suggest; but the most touching to me was a train of eight little girls, of her own age, from every Sunday school in town, dressed in pure white, who represented her pall-bearers.

ETHEL.

SISTER MATILDA BROWN, daughter of George and —— Earnest, was born in Tennessee, March 23, 1809, and died at Beverton, Sanford county, Ala., June 9, 1875, aged sixty-six years, two months and sixteen days. She was married to Bro. William Brown in 1829. Up to her death she had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for forty-five years, and had always maintained a consistent and cheerful Christian character, and was regarded by all who knew her as a blameless servant of God without rebuke. She exhibited great strength and firmness in adhering to her religious convictions and in the performance of duty. She was highly esteemed by all who knew her. She was a devoted wife, a kind mother and a good neighbor. Her children and grandchildren were much devoted to her. Sister Brown moved in a large circle of friends, all of whom mourn their loss; but their loss is her eternal gain.

Bro. William Brown's house has always been the welcome home of itinerant preachers, many of whom enjoyed its hospitality, and they always found Sister Brown ready and willing to minister to their wants. Her children rise up and call her blessed; all that are living are good citizens and useful members of the church, and those that are not (one or two) died in the church, and passed on before to the goodly land. In the death of Sister Brown the church has lost one of its most useful members, and the community one of its brightest ornaments. By many virtues and true devotion she won the affections of all who knew her.

DIED, at her residence in Perry county, Ala., July 31, 1875, Mrs. SEMANTHA HALL, wife of Thomas Hall, and daughter of Martin and Susan Dominic. She was born on the nineteenth of September, 1845, and was married in December, 1865. Seldom are we called upon to record the death of one so universally beloved and lamented as in the case of our departed sister. She was early converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and from that time until the day of her death chose for her adornment that meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price. The purity and loveliness of her every-day life witnessed to the cleansing power of Christ's blood. She adorned the several relations in life—daughter, friend, wife and mother—and was indeed a living epistle, known and read by all. She "rests from her loved employ." To the bereaved husband and grief-stricken parents we would say: Sorrow not as those without hope. Your loss is her gain. Weary not in well-doing, and you shall surely meet in that goodly land where parting and death are no more. IRENE G. GAYLE.

LITTLE MARY FOREST, only daughter of D. C. and Florence Whitley, of Letohatchee, Ala., died of diphtheria on the third of August, 1875, aged five years, nine months and twenty-eight days.

She was a rare child—exquisitely beautiful, unusually intelligent, enticingly lovely, and possessed the highest talent for music. The whole community feel the loss of this dear little girl. She was punctual at the Sunday school, perfect in recitation, and a model of deportment. She recognized herself a member of the church, was careful to keep the rules, and has been known to give timely and successful reproof to older members. She was scrupulous in observing the Sabbath, sometimes being the means of bringing home conviction to her parents. She attended the Hill's chapel camp meeting last year, and heard a most beautiful song there. When she returned she sang it correctly, and the church at once adopted it, the singing of which has often since thrilled and impressed the congregation. But God has taken her to his own bright home, and leaves for us her living ministry. W. F. NORTON.

A DYING Scotchman was asked: "Have you a glimpse of glory now, my brother, that you are dying?" He roused himself from his lethargy at such a question, and, raising himself from the agonies of death, said: "I'll hae none o' your glimpses noo that I am dying, since I ha'e had a full look at him for forty years." We all expect to have that full look at Christ in dying. Let us have it now.—R. P. Smith.

REV. J. F. MARLAY, in his life of Bishop Morris, says of him that during the two years of his Kentucky presiding eldership he broke down two horses, traveled eight thousand miles, preached five hundred times, and received for all his services less than the cost of the two horses.

IT IS better to please a fool than to anger him.

GOING OUT WITH THE TIDE.

Raise me up in my bed, wife;
There's the sound of the sea in my ear;
And it sings to my soul in a music
That earth is not blessed to hear.
Open the little window, wife,
Then come and sit by my side:
We'll wait God's sweet flood-water
To take me out with the tide.

I see the harbor-bar, wife,
And my dear little boat in the bay;
But who shall be able to guide her
When her master hath passed away?
I know that her helm, so trusty,
Will answer no other hand
As it answered mine, when I knew, wife,
You were waiting for me on the strand.

Our boys are all before us, wife;
Wee Jack is beneath the wave,
And blue-eyed Freddie sleeps, wife,
In yonder yew-bowered grave.
Were the early daisies cluster
Around his baby bed,
And the thrush sits chanting softer
In yon tree that shades the dead?

There's a chill runs through our hearts, wife,
When the harbor-bar doth moan;
But a darker grief will be yours, wife,
When you're left in the cot alone;
But a few more flows of the sea, wife,
And a few more ebbs of the tide,
Then God's sweet flood shall bring you
Again to your old man's side!

The red sun is low in the west, wife,
And the tide sinks down with the sun;
We will part with each other in love, wife,
For sweetly our lives have run.
Give me your hand, my own love,
As you gave it in days of yore:
We will clasp them, ne'er to be sundered,
When we meet on the far-off shore!

The Mont-De-Piete.

THE GREAT PAWNBROKING SHOP OF PARIS.

This institution, originally founded to protect poor people from the exactions of usurers, is something like a savings bank, for it receives small sums from any one who is willing to lend upon its security, for which interest is paid at from three to five per cent. There is the central office, and twenty four minor ones, in different parts of the city; and, to avoid embarrassment, there are always two departments. In the first jewelry and small valuable articles are pawned, and in the second every diversity of goods.

It may be generally supposed that the work of the Mont-de-piete would be much increased when a commercial crisis takes place, when the workmen are in want, or politics disarranges the ordinary course of events. Nothing of the kind. It is the banker of all the little shopkeepers and trades in Paris, and its surest and most numerous customers want money when they can turn it over most quickly. January and July are the times when the greatest activity takes place; and also during the month of December, when the makers of toys and fancy articles are preparing for opening their stalls on the boulevards for those who purchase New Year gifts. They bring everything of value which is not wanted immediately and pledge it, and with the money they receive purchase the materials for making the tasteful boxes, toys and sweetmeats which prove so attractive to the thousands who crowd the boulevards during the three days' sale. When this is ended the articles are taken out of the office with great punctuality during the first fortnight in January.

The masters who can only keep two or three workmen and those who possess a small capital lend to the Mont-de-piete when a bill falls due or the time arrives for renewing a patent. They do not generally pledge their watches, clothes or jewelry; but the work they have done, which accounts for the immense quantity, amounting to a sixth of the whole, of new goods in the warehouses. Many pledge the materials given by one customer in order to finish the work ordered by another. A dressmaker, for instance, receives a piece of silk for a dress. She is finishing another, which requires the trimming, for which she cannot pay. The first piece goes to the Mont-de-piete, and with the money she buys the fringe and buttons required, takes the dress home, and with the payment of her bill releases the other—a very advantageous arrangement, as persons closely pressed for capital can still pursue their calling.

The really indigent classes go very little to this huge pawn shop, a fact which was proved during the late war. When the English moved by the sufferings of the people during the blockade, sent over money to assist them, a sum of £800 was specially devoted to release the tools of the workmen, who were supposed to have pledged them during such a time of misery. The managers of the Mont-de-piete made this known as widely as possible, for the warehouses contained above a million articles, and how far would that small subscription go when the sum total was so great? Yet it proved to be much more than was needed, for they were only asked to release two thousand tools, and above £200 were left to apply to other purposes. If real misery had pledged its goods at the Mont-de-piete, no doubt it would have made its appearance; but most of the clients were quite able to redeem their goods when brighter days dawned.

Sometimes those who pledge are in high social position. About fifteen years ago, before the decree was passed limiting the sum borrowed to ten thousand francs, a lady of title, belonging to some of the most illustrious families in France, pledged in one day some sets of new jewels to the amount of fifty thousand francs. Soon after the managers were much surprised to hear from the police, not believing that any one of so high a rank could be implicated in a nefarious transaction. It was, however, the case. Using her own name, which gave confidence to the jewelers, she had got the gems on credit, and immediately pawned them. The creditors, when tired of waiting for their money and suspecting the truth, applied to the police for a search. No doubt was possible. Numbers of persons of high rank interfered in the affair, hoping to hush it up; but the lady had no more money, having quickly spent what she had got, and her family refused to pay it for her. Justice had to be called in, when the affair was arrested as if by enchantment. The prefect of police had spoken of it to the Emperor, who gave a check to pay for the articles and return them to the real owners. The most curious part of the affair was that the Emperor, deceived by the name, thought he was saving from disgrace the wife of a man who was in strong opposition to his government.

Sometimes there is a more tragical end to such adventures. Some years ago it seemed quite certain that forged pawn tickets, bearing every mark of authenticity, were sold to shop-keepers, who could not find a trace of the thing they demanded when they applied for it. Strict examination proved that the clerks were not to blame. The police at last fixed on an individual who led a respectable life outwardly, held an important office, and seemed to be above suspicion. It appeared that, under a plausible excuse, he had the entre into several of the offices belonging to the Mont-de-piete, that he was known by two different names and had three homes. He was arrested, led before the magistrate, where he denied any evil intention; but, seizing a moment when he was unobserved, he drew a pair of compasses from his handkerchief and stabbed himself to the heart.

A Word More to Young Wives.

BY SOPHY WINTHROP.

Mrs. Handy's pleasant "Talk with Young Wives" has set another woman thinking, and this latter woman would like to offer to her younger sisters two more simple rules, both of which have been, as the cookery-books say, "thoroughly tested in her own family."

In the first place, my dear young wife, do not let yourself begin to feel slighted or neglected or aggrieved. If Jack does not tell you every morning, noon and night that he loves you, it is nevertheless true (if he is the average Jack)—just as true as it was that moonlight evening when he first told you the wondrous tale.

Men are very differently constituted from women, and when a man has once poured out his heart before you and cast himself and all his worldly goods at your feet, has devoted to you all his spare time during a six months' engagement, and given himself up for a reasonable period to the sweet novelties of early married life, he has expressed about as much of himself as he can express without going against his own nature. It is his way to show his feelings by deeds, and if he takes pleasure in maintaining the little home you have set up, if he only now and then forgets to send up the dinner, and keeps your small portemonnaie as full as he can afford to keep it, he is proving his love for you just as much as if he should fall at your feet every day, and tell the old story over again. Don't fancy he is forgetting, or has lost those feelings about which he used to say so much. I don't doubt, as he goes down the street this morning, he is thinking what a sweet little wife he has left at home, and never guesses (dear old stupid fellow!) how that little wife's heart is aching because he didn't say so when he gave his hurried good-by kiss.

But don't let your heart ache; don't begin to shut its doors against him; repeat to yourself, every hour if you choose, all the loving things he ever said, all the thoughtful things he is doing every day, and keep on trusting him till he gives you very good reason for doing otherwise.

My second rule will be found to "work like a charm" in case the first should ever fail, and is an excellent one under all circumstances: Let there be the most entire frankness and honesty between husband and wife.

If the poor little heart will ache, go and tell Jack all about it, and ten to-one you will both be laughing in three minutes at the absurdity of your fancying he could forget to love you.

And let the rule work both ways. Beg Jack always to tell you if he has any fault to find with you, as he, of course, will have sometimes. Don't brood over each other's faults and failings. Don't "lay up" a sharp word or a careless act for a single hour. Have it brought out, forgiven and forgotten as soon as possible. Nothing dispels these dismal mists of misunderstandings like a good, free, honest talk.

"John and I are called a pair of turtle-doves," says a notably happy wife, "but I really think it is not so much from any sentimental reason as because we are perfectly honest with each other. There is the most perfect understanding between us. If I am vexed with him I tell him so and tell him why, and if he is vexed with me he does the same. And then we talk it all out, and have a grand 'squaring up.' And we never go to sleep with the least bit of a sore spot in either of our hearts."

If this rule were acted on more generally there would be more happy people in the world, and some men and women would be surprised to see how short a distance from home they need go to find their "afflictions."—Christian Union.

The Lord Sent Him.

One Sabbath a poor drunken man walked into one of our wealthy and fashionable congregations and seated himself near the pulpit. He came in just at the close of the first hymn, and his shabby appearance and uncertain gait attracted general observation.

The minister had scarcely commenced preaching when the stranger sunk into a deep sleep. His loud snoring almost drowned the voice of the preacher, and one of the officers of the church arose to lead him out of the building. "Let him remain," said the minister; "he does not disturb me. If he does you, try and bear with him. I hope that he may hear some word before he leaves which will persuade him to seek a new life. The man is not in his senses; there is some influence which we do not perceive which has led him here. I believe the Lord sent him."

The man continued to sleep on, but more quietly. The pealing of the organ and the singing of the choir at last aroused him. He started to his feet and gazed in bewilderment around. It was the old hymn, "Rock of Ages," which they were singing. He sat down and buried his face in his hands. What memories came thronging upon him, who shall say? That he was affected might be seen by his flowing tears. He listened to the prayer which followed—a touching petition that all might repent and seek the Savior, and that each one might find pardon and peace.

The next Sabbath he was again in church. This time he was a punctual and attentive listener. Although still shabbily dressed, he had paid some regard to his attire. He continued to attend and to improve in his appearance. In one of the prayer meetings he arose and said he hoped he had become a Christian. He had had a pious mother; her great desire was that he might become a Christian. Since her death he had become a victim to intemperance. For years his course had been downward. On the Sabbath when he first entered the church he had heard the singing, and paused to listen. A voice seemed to bid him enter. He thought it might be the voice of God speaking to him for the last time. Half overcome with drink, and almost in rags, he entered the church. He heard part of the hymn, "Rock of Ages"—the hymn sung by his mother upon her death-bed. The prayer which followed seemed meant for him. He resolved to leave off his old habit, and by the grace of God he had kept his resolution.

He became a sincere and devoted Christian. Of that church he became a member, and subsequently a deacon. "I do not know," said his pastor, "a man more earnest or more successful in doing good than he."

Thy Kingdom Come.

In many parts of Germany this petition of the Lord's Prayer is thus repeated: Thy kingdom come to us. And Luther, in his small catechism (Der Kleine Catechismus) has the following in the questions and answers on this petition:

"What does this petition mean?

"God's kingdom comes well by himself without our prayer, but we pray in this petition that it may also come to us.

"How does this come to pass?

"When the heavenly Father gives us his Holy Spirit, so that we, through his grace, believe his holy word, and live godly here in time, and forever hereafter."

Our prayer for the coming of the kingdom avails not in respect to others unless it be also, and very prominently, our desire that the rule of the heavenly Father may be every day more fully extended over ourselves. And, as Luther states it, this comes to pass when we believe the Scriptures and live more godly lives. When we read daily the holy word, that we may know God's will in order that we may do it; when we receive the teaching and commands of the Bible with an humble, child-like faith; when nothing so speaks to our hearts and gives force to our endeavors as a thus saith the Lord—then indeed the kingdom is coming to us, and then we may be sure that the prayer will be heard when we offer it on behalf of others. There is nothing but falsehood and dishonesty in the prayer when the offering of it has no reference to ourselves. But there is that truth in the inward parts, of which the psalmist speaks, when we pray first that God may make us subject to his holy will, and then bring others also to believe and love and obey. Blessed condition, when this kingdom shall thus come to all the dwellers on earth! However little the evidence of it there may now be, it is the great certainty of certainties, for the mouth of the Lord has spoken it. We need not human signs and earthly tokens to awaken in us the belief in this coming glory. No tokens of earth can be the adequate forerunners or helpers of this mighty work. The Spirit that bloweth as it listeth, and which must do the work, will not allow any other tokens to foreshadow the coming glory but the humble prayer of Christian hearts, praying as does the pious German peasant: Zu uns komme dein Reich—"thy kingdom come to us."—Christian Intelligencer.

HOW JOHN BUNYAN GOT OUT OF PRISON.—Bunyan was in his day quite a controversial writer, and was very severe upon the Quakers until he learned that through the intercession of the Quakers he obtained his release from prison. It is a somewhat noteworthy fact, now well authenticated, that Charles the Second liberated Quakers and Puritans from confinement through the personal intercession of the Quakers, among whom was Richard Carver, who was mate of the fishing vessel which conveyed the King to France after the famous battle of Worcester, 1651. This honest Quaker sailor, after twenty years had rolled away, appealed to the King in person in behalf of those who were in prison. When the fugitive King fled for his life, this sailor conveyed him on shore. The vessel was bound for Poole, con laden, with two passengers, who passed for merchants running away from their creditors; the fugitive King and Lord Wilmot were landed at Feeamp, in Normandy, upon the back of a Quaker, and the vessel re-crossed the channel to Poole.

When the honest sailor appeared before his majesty, the King expressed astonishment that he had not previously sought some reward. The sailor replied that he merely had done his duty, and God had rewarded him with peace of mind.

"And now, sire, I ask nothing for myself, but that your majesty will do the same for my friends that I did for you—set the poor, pious sufferers at liberty, that you may have that peace and satisfaction that always follows good actions." King Charles thereupon pardoned four hundred and seventy-one Quakers, and many Independents and Baptists—among them John Bunyan.

Religious Intelligence.

—It is estimated that six hundred persons have professed conversion recently in the great revival in Roanoke county, Va.

—The Swedenborgian convention proposes to again distribute the works of Emanuel Swedenborg, free of price, among the Protestant clergy of the country.

—The Baptists of Great Britain report a clear increase of 10,582 members during the past year, the largest gain they have had in any one year since 1864.

—Out of sixty-four rectors in the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Maryland, it is found that the salaries of thirty-five were below $1,000 a year; some receive $500, and some as low as $200.

—A protest against Ritualism has been presented to the Archbishop of Canterbury from the county of Kent, signed by two thousand communicants. Among these are ten peers, five peers' sons, four baronets and eighty-one magistrates.

—The Waldensian mission in Italy received 180 communicants during the past year, and has 367 candidates under instruction. It has 33 churches, and employs 97 agents, of whom 23 are pastors of congregations. The annual report speaks of a marked increase of spiritual life in Sicily, and in some towns of northern Italy.

—Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff, of New York, was present at the meeting of the council of the British branch of the Evangelical Alliance, June 16, and announced the contemplated biennial meeting of the American branch in Pittsburg next autumn. The receipts of the British Alliance from July 1, 1874, to May 31, 1875, were £1,349; expenditures, £1,468.

—In March, 1867, the Patriarch of the Coptic Church made a bonfire of Bibles and other books in Osiout, Upper Egypt, thinking thus to put a stop to the circulation of the Scriptures and the evangelistic work. That bonfire excited curiosity and advertised the books. Since that time 16,731 volumes of the Scriptures and religious educational books have been sold in that part of Egypt, and $2,282 been received for them.

—Dr. Post, writing to the Evangelist, mentions that the Nusairi Christians who had been drafted into the Lesgoon corps of Beirut are allowed to attend Protestant services. They have generally been at their place during the morning hour of worship. Lately two of them have deserted. It is supposed that they have run away to their homes, and it now remains to be seen whether the government will reopen a troublesome question by causing their re-arrest.

—Mr. Philip Phillips, now in Australia, and the originator of the solo singing which Mr. Sankey and others are using so successfully, has arranged to visit India, and is expected in Calcutta about the first of December, where he is to give a number of "song services," in the aid of a new Methodist tabernacle in Calcutta. Mr. Phillips is himself engaged in erecting a large preaching hall in a neglected part of New York, but he has generously offered to place his entire earnings in India at the disposal of the friends of the Calcutta enterprise.

—The bones of George Fox and Rowland Hill are shortly to be removed to other resting-places. Hill's remains, now beneath the pulpit in Surrey chapel, are to be removed to Christ-church, Rev. Newman Hall's new place of worship. The removal of the remains of Fox is necessitated by the proposed erection of a board school on part of the Quaker's burying ground on Bunhill Fields. Bunhill Fields burying ground is the well-known "Dissenters' Westminster Abbey." It contains the graves of Bunyan, Watts and many other worthies not of the Established Church.

—It is well known that in the hardest mission-field in India—the Northwest Provinces—the Methodist Episcopal Church is making comparatively rapid progress. A writer to the Indian Evangelical Review gives some account of the manner in which the Methodist laborers carry on their work. They endeavor to make a break into some caste—as, for instance, the low-caste emigrant Sikhs of Moradabad and a similar low caste in the Budaon district. Having made a start in some such caste, they work on, within its limits, from family to family, until Christianity becomes a power in that caste, and begins to propagate itself through social and household influences. Marriage customs are found to be a very great hinderance to the gospel. Girls command a price and are married very early, and parents are often unable to withstand the temptation of selling their daughters to heathen. This leads to many exclusions from the church. Every year, however, makes the Christian sentiment stronger, and the hinderance will gradually disappear.

—The yearly report from the Cesarea station of the Western Turkey mission of the American Board shows that, notwithstanding the terrible famine, there has been as great progress of the mission during 1874 as during any year since 1854. Contributions have naturally declined, but the number of Protestant adherents has considerably increased and the schools have been greatly prospered. In several of the outstations there has been a very marked advance. The imprisonment which a native preacher served out in Everek, at the instance of his Armenian opponents, gave the work a fresh start in that village, and there has been a very rapid growth in the number of Protestant believers. At the youngest of the outstations, Roomdigira, there has been an equally marked progress. Every Saturday one hundred or more crowd into a small room in order to hear the gospel. A large number of women are interested. The report states, in conclusion, that the call for teachers, preachers and books has never before been so frequent and from so many new places. Several of these have been occupied, and others may be if sufficient laborers can be provided.

Our Young People.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

I AM THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

Oh, come, ye little lambs of the flock,
To the Shepherd kind and true!
He is waiting to gather you to his arms,
And bear you to pastures new.

He will lead through meadows green and fresh,
By the sparkling streams away,
And you need not fear the cruel wolf
If from him you never stray.

Oh, list to his voice! He calls you now
From the far off hills above;
Then grieve not your gentle Shepherd's heart
By wandering from his love.

The storm will come and the night grow dark,
And he will be far away;
Then what will keep the savage wolf
From seizing on his prey?

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 14.

A BEE HUNT.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: I heard of a man once who had had his leg bitten off in a fox-trap, and everywhere he would go some inquisitive person, whose curiosity got the better of good breeding, would want to know how he lost his leg, and would annoy him very much by asking him. Well, one day a very ungainly specimen of a questioner, whose very nose was an interrogation point, and whose body was held like an interrogation point, and whose two arms were held like two interrogation points, and who looked himself like one great big interrogation point, came up to this one-legged man and said: "Say, mister, how did you come to lose that leg o' yourn?" The one-legged man looked him all over for a moment and said: "I will tell you provided you will promise me most solemnly not to ask me another question." So the interrogation point gave the promise, holding up his hand as though he had hold of a Bible. Then the one-legged man said:

"It was bit off."

The interrogation point looked very much dissatisfied, but he had promised not to ask any more questions; yet he hung round until the one-legged man asked him why he didn't go away.

"Why, mister," said he, "I was wanting mighty bad to ask you what it was that bit it off."

And then I heard of a fox, a cunning old fellow, who was up to all kinds of fox tricks, who came one day to an arbor on which some grapes were growing, and they were finer than any grapes he had seen in his rambles through the forest; and he looked up at the luscious bunches, with the sweet juice almost dropping through the thin-skinned berries, and he determined to have some of them. So he gave a big jump right up into the air, but they hung too high for him. He tried to climb up the arbor, but there were no slats low enough down for him to get on to, and the posts were too slippery to hold to; so he went back underneath, and tried jumping up again and again, but it was of no use—the grapes were too high. So when he found that he could not possibly reach them he turned away and said to a wolf that was passing: "I wouldn't have the sour old grapes if I could."

"But, grandpa, what in the world have those stories got to do with "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest?"

I don't know, Harry. You had better ask Tom.

Once when I was in South America one of the sailors who had made several voyages to that section, and knew a great deal about the birds and beasts and insects of that country, asked me if I wouldn't like to go on a bee hunt. I told him I would like it very much, though I had no idea then what kind of a thing a bee hunt was. Well, he said that if I would get a day's leave of absence from the captain he would lead the party. So I got leave of absence for a dozen or more of the sailors, and asked the leader, whose name was Thomas Sinkle, but who went by the nickname of "Porpoise Tom," what preparations we must make for the hunt. And, by the way, now I think of it, I had better tell you how he got the name of "Porpoise Tom." You see, one night after dark we were all sitting on deck, just abaft the binnacle, spinning yarns.

"Grandpa," says Harry, "you are getting almost as bad as Tom. What do you mean by 'abaft the binnacle' and 'spinning yarns?'"

Oh, yes, Harry, I forgot that I was not talking to sailors. Abaft the binnacle means just behind the stair-case or ladders where the sailors go down into the hold of the ship where their bunks are that they sleep in; and "spinning yarns" means telling stories as sailors only can.

Well, as I was saying, each one of us had tried his hand, or his tongue rather, at a story except Tom Sinkle, and now it was his turn, and we insisted upon his telling his story. He seemed rather reluctant at first, because he said he liked to be believed when he told a story, and he was afraid we wouldn't believe the one he was about to tell. So we all promised to believe him if we possibly could, and he began.

"Once when I was coasting off the coast of Maine I went ashore for a short stop on Deer Island. You see I was first mate of the brig called the Sally Lotus, and how I come to be there might interest some of you; coz why, I didn't go ashore of my own mind, not exactly. The Sally had been running from Castine to Boston, carrying wood and bringing back store goods for the merchants in Castine, and we used sometimes to fill orders for Deer Isle and Mount Desert, and them other coast places. Well, it wasn't a very long trip, and the brig was right staunch and easily handled. So we didn't have many men aboard, but just hired extra hands to help us load and unload. So it often happened that one of us was left on deck alone for a watch if the weather was good, though usually there were two of us at a time.

"Well, as I was saying, just as we were leaving Castine for the last trip I ever made on the Sally a man came running down to her after some of the sails were hoisted, and asked to be taken on board to work his passage to Boston. Well, as we were short of hands the captain told him to come aboard, and before I had had a good look at him there he was on deck, and we were off. Then for the first time I recognized him as the man I had given such a thrashing to a week before at Blue Hill. This is how I came to thrash him. You see—"

"I am sorry to have to interrupt you, grandpa, but it is time to put these little folks to bed."

"You come too soon, mamma. Grandpa has got so many stories started he won't know how to get them straight," says Harry.

We'll try it, at any rate, my boy, next time. Good-night.

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From Our Little Friends.

AUGUST 24, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see that other little girls and boys write to you, so I thought I would like to try.

I am a little girl nearly eight years old. I live in the country, way out in the piny woods. It is not convenient for me to go to school, but I am trying to learn at home. I go to Sunday school though, and study in Our Little People. I think it is very nice to get a new paper every month—all my own. We take your ADVOCATE, and get one every week. It is a great pleasure to us. I think you are very kind to print stories for us children. I like stories, and think Grandpa Goodale's are very nice. I was quite surprised, though, when he said that bees didn't make honey. I am anxious, too, to hear "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." I hope he will tell us next week. May be he will. Your little friend,

EUNICE.

MOUNTAIN HOME, ALA., AUG. 1, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy, as Cousin Mary calls me; but I think I am a large boy for my age—five years old and nearly six. My mamma says I ought to be better than I am, to be so old. Mr. Editor, you know it is hard for a little boy to see anything funny in the school-room and not laugh. I am trying to be good. I do so love to read Grandpa Goodale's stories. Please tell him to finish telling "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." I must tell you that we have a Missionary Society in the Sabbath school, and I am a member of it. I go to school every day to my mamma. At night she reads the ADVOCATE to us. We think you must love little children, to send us such nice little stories. We have so many nice peaches. I wish I lived on the railroad, so I could send you some. Good-by.

Your little friend,

WILLIE TODD.

TALLAHATTA, ALA., AUG. 1, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been wanting to tell you how much I enjoy Grandpa Goodale's stories to the children. I can hardly wait for the week to pass for another paper, hoping to learn "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." Mamma says it has been good for us—that we have learned so many other useful things. I do hope Grandpa Goodale will continue to write. I have a dear mamma that talks to me of heaven, and has taught me to love the Savior. I go to school every day, and to Sabbath school—get lessons in the Little People. I am a member of the Missionary Society. I have no papa. God took him to heaven when I was only two years old. I have two little brothers there too. I am only seven years old, and could not write well enough to write to you, so my cousin wrote for me. I must close. Good-by. Your little friend,

MARY CARTER.

Perfecting of the Saints.

This is mentioned as an end in the gift of various orders of ministers. The training of saints, the perfecting of them, is an important part of the minister's work. Lest we should suppose that some are to neglect it, in their more exclusive devotion to other objects, Paul makes it the business of all—of "apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers." We are not to press the interpretation too far, so as to exclude the effort to awaken sinners and to bring them to repentance. Only this: It is a prominent duty of all classes of ministers to aim at the improvement and completion of Christians. They are to preach to them, to labor in every way to bring them up to the highest possible state of holiness and usefulness.

This perfecting, as explained in the connection in Ephesians, is "the edifying of the body of Christ," building up the church even as the builder carries up the house—stone upon stone, and beam upon beam, until the structure is done. It is a growth in Christ, that believers may "grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." The great consummation is to come "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." Christians are to grow, to be no more children, but to attain to spiritual manhood.

The ministry, in all of its offices and gifts, is ordained to this end, and for it to fail herein is to come short in its most vital purpose. It is a painstaking labor, and the object should be kept clearly in view. The saints have their claims and needs, and these must be met. The converted have many defects in knowledge and experience. The best of them have much to learn, and attainments to be reached. Their duties and privileges, and their responsibilities are to be set before them, and they are to be stirred up and urged to go forward in the new life. The object which the Apostle Paul ever kept in sight was that he might "present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." Beyond the awakening of the sinner—his conversion and union with the church—was this work of perfecting the saints. After becoming saints, enlargement, growth and completion were insisted on. The new professors were followed up, kept closely in the school of Christ, and helped on in a vigorous progress. The spiritual children were taught, admonished, edified, nourished, that they might come "unto a perfect man." This crop cannot be "laid by" and left to mature of itself. The perfecting ministry must be kept up, the cultivation continued, and the individual and the church followed with faithful, heart-searching warnings and teachings.

Edifying, instructing, are the main wants. People who will not submit to being taught, who turn away from the strong meat of gospel doctrine, and who are consumed with a feverish desire for exciting and brilliant preaching, must not be permitted to turn the embassador of God from his plain duty. "The lust for fine preaching," as Bishop Marvin phrases it, is indeed in the way. The perfecting of the saints is something very different from gratifying the taste of the worldly and meeting the whims of critics. It is not a superficial process, nor one that is likely to captivate the popular mind, and is one that is calculated to offend the formal and careless professor. The word directed to this end is as a hammer and as a fire. Self-crucifixion, the death of self, the destruction of covetousness, the expulsion of carnality, the enthronement of love, are demanded. It is a worry and an offense to the worldly-minded Christian to be brought under this refining fire, and to be disturbed in the enjoyment of that easy type of godliness which he has chosen. Teaching is not what the most desire. It is rather entertainment, excitement, the pleasing fancy, the discursive and pointless style, and themes which enlist the mind without touching the heart and conscience. On the other hand, spiritual teaching is the real need of all and the earnest desire of many. There are sheep that wish to be fed, saints hungering and thirsting after righteousness, souls famishing and waiting for the true bread—the bread of life. They have entered upon this life of faith, they have begun to encounter or have long been contending with inward and outward temptations. They are waiting for a perfecting ministry, longing to be led up higher, and to be introduced to the perfect manhood in Christ.

It is not a class of specialists that we would evoke, but we would give greater prominence to this special function of the Christian ministry. The perfecting of the saints is not for any one order or office, but is alike the duty of all. It is a gift within us to be stirred up, and to be kept in lively exercise. Excellence in this direction requires a deep spiritual experience, the profoundest insight of the Scriptures, and a thorough acquaintance with the human heart. Difficult as it may be to lead men to Christ, it is still more difficult to bring them "unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." As compared with an awakening ministry, a higher order of gifts every way is required for the perfecting of the saints. They should go together—an awakening and a perfecting ministry—harmoniously blended in the same man, and exhibited together in nearly every sermon.

We emphasize the one not as opposed to the other, but because we think there is neglect in the careful and thorough teaching of converted people. They must be urged onward, the goal of a stronger faith and of a clearer knowledge must be set before them, and whatever mars and weakens the spiritual life must be exposed and cured. To turn men to righteousness is a great privilege, and there is a bright reward; but to lead saints up to the loftiest heights of salvation has a distinction and a reward which excel.

Discipline Violated.

In relation to the insertion of Bishop Keener's decision upon the restoration of an expelled member, rendered at the St. Louis District Conference in June last, we made the following reference:

RESTORATION TO MEMBERSHIP OF AN EXPELLED MEMBER.—We insert this week the text of the episcopal decision made at the St. Louis District Conference in June last by the presiding Bishop.

An expelled member of the St. John's church was reported by the pastor of the Chateau Avenue church as a member of the District Conference. His membership was challenged by the preacher in charge of the St. John's church, and upon this the decision was made.

It has been freely commented upon, but for some reason the text has not as yet been published by the commentators.

It is, of course, subject to the revision of the College of Bishops, in common with all episcopal decisions.

Our confrere of the St. Louis Christian Advocate copies the decision and our editorial paragraph, and writes a lengthy article on the subject, of which the following extract contains the material points so far as we are concerned:

"We do not know whether the above allusion was or was not made to this paper. Soon after the Conference alluded to, we gave space in the paper for a communication from Bro. F. A. Owen. This we thought due to him in view of his age and long standing in the church, and of the peculiar circumstances under which he was then placed. Subsequently we wrote two or three articles on the general questions involved, and wrote them at the earnest solicitation of many friends, ministers and others, who sought to know our views on the subject. These articles were not intended to be, nor were they in fact, "comments" on the Bishop's decision, but simply a discussion of the general principles. We also gave place to a communication from the venerable Dr. Baker on the subject, which, to some extent, did partake of the nature of comments. We gave him a hearing because of the clear and forcible character of his communication, and of his age, experience and well-known abilities.

This has been about the extent of this paper's connection with the matter; and if the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE desires to know the reason why we have not published the decision, that reason can be very plainly and candidly stated. At the time of its rendition, and so far as we knew up to the time of its publication, it was claimed to be an official episcopal decision, and we knew the Discipline of the church forbid the publication of such until after they had been approved by the College of Bishops, and then it was lawful to publish them only in such manner as the Bishops should agree to adopt. That was the reason, and a sufficient reason. We could have had access to the decision any day since it was rendered, and might have published it in any issue, but did not believe it would have been lawful or right to do so until the question of its real character had been settled—that is, until it had been definitely determined whether the decision were formal or informal. Now the fact of its publication under the circumstances goes far to indicate that it is to be regarded as informal. While we published what is here stated, we have received and declined to publish not less perhaps than a score of communications bearing more or less directly on the general subject. And in all that we have said or published the design was to maintain and defend the right, and promote peace and good will among brethren. No unkind or disrespectful feelings possessed us, and we think candid men will do us the justice to say that no unkind or disrespectful words have been uttered by us.

"The above allusion" was to the comments that had been freely made. At that time we knew of no church paper that had voluminously discussed the decision, or that had said anything about it, except the St. Louis Christian Advocate, although we were aware that certain "fly sheets" had been liberally distributed in some quarters.

That the printing of an episcopal decision, in connection with the proceedings of a District or Annual Conference, violates the disciplinary prohibition is doubtful. The decision is, in fact, given to the public when rendered in open Conference and placed upon record, and, if we are not mistaken, decisions thus rendered are not unfrequently printed along with Conference proceedings or as matters of interest to the people. There is a difference between an informal publication and one that gives it legal force and application as the authoritative interpretation or construction of law. In this last sense, and as we take it in the sense of the disciplinary prohibition, Bishop Keener's late decision has not been published. That decision was authoritative in the case pending, but no further authoritative until approved and published officially by the College of Bishops.

Admitting, however, that the law prohibits the printing of episcopal decisions in any form and for any purpose, by anybody, until recorded in permanent form, and published in such manner as the Bishops shall agree to adopt, we do not see how our brother of the St. Louis Advocate can escape censure. He "knew the Discipline of the church forbid the publication of such until after they had been approved by the College of Bishops, and then it was lawful to publish them only in such manner as the Bishops should agree to adopt. That was the reason, and a sufficient reason." Further, "we could have had access to the decision any day since it was rendered, and might have published it in any issue, but did not believe it would have been lawful or right to do so until the question of its real character had been settled." Notwithstanding this scrupulous deference to the Discipline, a communication was published in the St. Louis Advocate, nearly six columns long, soon after the decision was rendered, which reviews and discusses the whole affair, and contains abundant strictures and adverse criticism upon the decision itself. In his communication Rev. F. A. Owen gives the decision in substance: "The facts were given, noted down, and the subject taken under advisement by the Bishop, who, on the next day (June 11,) in open Conference, read his decision, which was to the effect that my action in the case of Dameron's reception was irregular—null and void—and that Logan D. Dameron was not a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. The decision was based mainly on points of difference between the reception of a person into the church and the restoration of one who had been expelled." Here, then, is the decision in substance published, and its merits freely commented on. Besides this, the editor wrote two or three articles on "the general questions involved," and inserted a communication from Dr. Baker.

With these facts before us, with the substance of the decision published, and with many columns of unfavorable comment and criticism, we were at a loss to conjecture why the text of the decision had not been printed with them. We could not imagine that the editor of the St. Louis Advocate gave that construction to the prohibition to publish which he now states, because the letter and spirit of it, as so construed, had both been violated. That scrupulosity which stickles at the ipsissima verba—the publication of the text of the decision, while it could give the substance with voluminous and unfriendly comments—is past our comprehension. We did not dream that this was possible.

If the letter of the law has not been infringed, Dr. McAnally's course has been in contravention of its spirit and intent. Supposing his understanding of the law to be correct, the prohibition to publish was for the purpose of keeping a decision out of the papers and free from public discussion, because such publication and discussion might engender strife, and prove detrimental to the welfare of the church in other ways. Whatever the end of the law might be, it has been frustrated by the course which the St. Louis Advocate has pursued in this case. The decision, long before Bishop Keener authorized its insertion in our columns, was published in a way to do great injustice to the Bishop, and to inflict hurt upon the church. Whether any communications favorable to the decision had been sent to the St. Louis Christian Advocate we do not know. That side may have been too loyal to violate the spirit and purpose of the law. Only one side, however, has been admitted to the discussion, and it was time that the decision should speak for itself. If the law of Discipline has been violated in printing Bishop Keener's decision, it was because that law had been already so flagrantly and inexcusably disregarded as to make it necessary to the ends of peace and justice. Our brother of St. Louis may disclaim for himself any intent to publish the decision or to discuss it. We think unprejudiced men will judge that he has done both, and in a manner far more offensive, mischievous and unlawful than if he had given the text at first.

With the merits of the decision we have nothing to do, nor do we question motives. We are far from the scene, and have nothing but the kindest feelings for all concerned. What we have written is in vindication of an editorial line which was not meant as a censure to any one. We did not know why the text of the decision had not been published. In view of what had appeared we did not suppose that the law could be in the way. It might have been an oversight, an inadvertence, but surely, after publishing so much, it would have been consistent and fair to have given the whole document in the Bishop's own words.

Fraternity or Union?

Several reasons have been given why the business of the Fraternity Manufacturing Company, whose headquarters are at Round Lake, and branch office is at Baltimore, has failed and will continue to fail; but there are others which, with the forbearance of the ADVOCATE, I will briefly discuss.

A plain, honest interpretation of the acts of the General Conference and the church at large shows that the purpose of our people is nothing more nor less than the establishment of such an interchange of greetings and courtesies as we would extend to and receive from any other evangelical church, North or South. This movement she started in 1845. Friendly intercourse, however, has not existed between the "two great Methodisms" simply because the Church North refused to deal with the Church South, on the ground that "she was in league with death and in covenant with hell." After that famous league and covenant was violently broken by the "late little unpleasantness," and after the Methodist Episcopal Church had failed upon the military policy—that "to the victors belong the spoils"—to seize and hold all our property, and also failed in that other policy of "disintegration and absorption," to devour our people in squads of small numbers, then she conceived the happy thought of fraternity, and said: "Whereas, We have been unable either to crush you by power or destroy you by bribes; therefore, Resolved, That we be brethren. There is no longer any reason why we should be otherwise than loving." So, after two or three very remarkable movements, the North sent messengers to Louisville, and there, by the policy of talk and tears, attempted to accomplish what she had failed to do by these other policies. Her representatives came, dolis instructi et arte Pelasga, and rehearsed their eloquence, et dona ferentes. And, like the credulous Trojans, a few of our men, even the "hero of the last ten acres," seem to have believed all they heard. Capti quo dolis lacrymis que coactis.

Now all these years, from 1845 to 1874, our church had its record on the subject; and there it stands unchanged to-day, in a single letter or word. It was just such a proposition of fraternity as we would have made to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church or the General Convention of the Baptist Church. Nothing more, nothing less was ever contemplated by the body which appointed Dr. Pierce, nor by Dr. Pierce himself, nor by any subsequent Conference. But has this been the purpose of the Northern Church? Most manifestly it has not. Her purpose, since the war at least, has been organic union. This appears from the offensive policies before spoken of, from her Chicago resolutions under which her representatives appeared at Memphis, from the speeches of her delegates at Louisville, and from the fact that, while she has never denied this purpose, it comes out over and anon in the speeches and writings of her active men. This is the true state of the case. The real issue between the two Methodisms is not simple fraternity—for this could have been accomplished years ago if the North had only wanted it—but the continued existence of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The Methodist Episcopal Church South desires to live and work, preserving the integrity of her corporate individuality. The Methodist Episcopal Church desires to take us into her fold, thereby destroying this corporate individuality.

Now which of these views does the Manufacturing Company hold and abet? Let their own words answer.

One, in quite a lengthy article, describing the advantages of union, says that unless we enter into it "there will be disintegration and absorption with a vengeance"—which evidently means that unless the Church South, by a formal act of her General Conference, agrees to go in all together, that one by one ministers, members and Conferences will break off and go any way. Another, in a piece designed to be very logical and convincing, argues that fraternity means union, and nothing else. He ridicules the idea of fraternity without organic union as the merest dream—the wildest vagary of the most impractical mind.

Another (our missionary secretary) uses these remarkable words—remarkable, first, for their non-egotism; secondly, for the positive statement, not of an opinion, but of a known fact; thirdly, for stating as a fact what I doubt if any Bishop, preacher or layman from South Carolina to Texas, believes is a fact: "It is no egotism for me to say that perhaps I am as well acquainted with the Methodist Episcopal Church South as any man in our bounds. I edited a church paper for nearly eighteen years; I filled the office of book agent for nearly four years; I have been missionary secretary nine years; I have traveled from the center to the circumference of the whole church; I know the spirit and tone and sentiment and feeling of our people; and while there are a few who seem a little stubborn and unyielding, the vast majority of our people, ministers and members, are for coming closer and closer together." (Italics his.)

The Methodisms may come closer together by a single step, and then there will be simple fraternal relations, unembarrassed by unsettled property claims. This, I repeat, is what we have never refused, and for this one step our General Conference has made provision. But any man who knows the English language must know that the expression, "closer and closer together," in that sentence carries the idea of more than one step—of progressive steps. "Closer and closer!" Now what further step can we take than that which will bring us to fraternity? What step does the "genial doctor" know we are for taking beyond that one already provided for by the General Conference? There is but one other, and that will lead to union—what one of the copartners calls organic union—the one the North has always wanted us to take.

This construction of his words comes not only out of the expression, "closer and closer together," but from the whole speech, from the place and the occasion of its delivery, and has been given by men both North and South, because no other can be given. And to emphasize his words he uncovers his brow to the breezes of Round Lake, and exposes his clustering laurels to the admiring crowds, epitomizes the labors of his life, and tells what he has done and been for the last thirty years—driving home his speech with the whole weight of his life. "While there are a few who seem stubborn and unyielding, the vast majority of our people are for coming closer and closer together." This is astounding. I have never traveled from the center to the circumference, but have been a good way on the circumference, and talked on this subject with many ministers and laymen of several Conferences, representing thousands of souls, and have yet to find the first man who is for going one step beyond what the General Conference has arranged for. The vast majority is among "the few" whom the "genial doctor" in his speech characterized as "stubborn and unyielding," "ill-natured," "stirrers up of strife," "with bitterness in their hearts." "Vast majority" indeed! The vast majority is for standing by the action of the General Conference.

The missionary secretary has been misinformed. Vast majority! I do not believe there is three per cent. of either ministers or members who are for going one step beyond simple fraternity. The vast majority of this supposed three per cent., no doubt, are "for coming closer and closer together."

Very Unique.

The following experience of Bro. Parsons, in reference to a bill sent to a subscriber, is indeed unique, and deserves to be preserved and set before the entire world of delinquent subscribers. These are times when all who have any dregs of conscience left will do their utmost to bring up arrears. These days are making publishers and editors old before their time. But to the extract from the Pacific Methodist:

The gloomy and almost dispiriting season of financial drouth which has wrought hardly with all classes of people in the land has had its effect with us. We have suffered more and longer this year for lack of money than ever before. However, what has been lacking in money has been in a manner made up with compliments. But compliments, however gratifying to the editor, are not current coin with his dealers who furnish him with paper, etc. The following note is so unique, so business-like, so pithy, that we are led to believe our luck is changing. The author is not a resident of California, though he writes after the style of the flush times of 1849. It is in response to a gentle dun, and if half our other gentle duns could have half the effect of this how happy we should be. We thank our friend over the mountains. May the Pacific Methodist in some way become his benefactor. Here is the note:

"MR. W. B. PARSONS: Please find check for $20 to pay for the two years back subscription to the Methodist, and the other $12 to pay for three years in advance.

Yours truly, ——."

BISHOP WIGHTMAN, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of September 4, accompanied by Mrs. Wightman and daughter, came to Nashville last week, and will not return to Charleston till after the session of the Tennessee Conference, at which he is to preside. He will attend the session of the Western Virginia Conference at Guyandotte, September 15, and return to Nashville to be present at the opening of the Vanderbilt, October 3. We hoped that he would be able to attend the Cedar Hill camp meeting, but he had contracted a cold and hoarseness which precluded his attendance. He was able, however, to preach on Sunday morning, at Tulip Street, to the great delight and profit of a large assembly. The Bishop and Mrs. Wightman are much pleased with the appearance of things at the Vanderbilt.

REV. J. M. CARR, a venerable local preacher, residing in Drew county, Ark., died August 8. His son, Rev. J. F. Carr, of the Little Rock Conference, writing to the Western Methodist, says:

In grief I write you a line to say that my faithful father died on the morning of August 8. No better man than the Rev. J. M. Carr; a local preacher thirty-five years; religious from youth; loved and honored by all; and died as he lived—in great peace. An obituary will be furnished soon by his pastor.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.—At this season of the year unfavorable reports concerning the health of the city are frequently circulated. The president of the Board of Health states that there is no yellow fever here. So far as we can learn, New Orleans has never had a healthier August and September. Our readers can rest assured that we shall not keep back the real state of the case. When there is yellow fever here we shall not hesitate to say so. At present we have a very healthy city.

SOUTHWEST MISSOURI CONFERENCE.—Change of Time.—We copy this from the Nashville Christian Advocate. Preachers will please take due notice, and govern themselves accordingly.

"Bishop Keener informs us that the time of holding the Southwest Missouri Conference at Neosho has been changed from October 20 to October 13."

THERE are very interesting revivals now in progress, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of August 28, at several of our churches in this city, among them Calvary, Rev. H. H. Kennedy, pastor. There have already been several conversions reported, and there are quite a number of penitents at the altar seeking peace and pardon.

REV. W. S. TURNER, writing from Perote, Ala., September 1, says:

Our District Conference at Clopton is just over. It was a gracious season of refreshing. I will send you some account of it soon.

THE Rev. Dr. Moran, late of the North Carolina Conference, has accepted a call to the Bethany Independent Methodist Church in Baltimore, and he was duly installed pastor August 30.

REV. J. W. ROSS, pastor of Walnut Bend station, White River Conference, died August 14.

Letter from Dr. Dollinger.

The following highly significant letter from the Rev. Dr. Dollinger to a clergyman at Baden recently appeared in the Heidelburg Journal:

MUNICH, October 18, 1874.

REVEREND SIR: Gladly do I answer the questions addressed to me, although briefly, as is necessary in the case of an old man upon whose time there are many demands.

So far as I am concerned, I class myself through conviction with the ancient Catholic communion. I believe that it has a high mission to fulfill, which is three-fold: First. Witness to give for old ecclesiastical truth against the new and erroneous doctrines of universal power and infallibility, and to stand as a permanent and eloquent protest against the new article of faith that owes its existence to the arbitrary determination of this last Pope. Second. It is, according to my own opinion, the duty of the Old Catholic communion to draw back gently and by successive steps this church, disturbed by unitell superstition and error, to the simple and ancient faith. Third. It should serve as an instrument and means of producing in the future a union of the now divided churches. A step in this direction, if only a small one, was made some weeks ago at Bonn. I trust in a successful issue to this work of peace.

I have, at the same time, no hope that under the next, or even the succeeding Pope, anything of great importance will be accomplished; and, so far as I perceive, all who understand the position of the Roman curia and the clergy are as hopeless as myself. In the whole Roman Church there is one irresistible power before which all others—bishops, cardinals, spiritual orders and schools—stand passive. This is the Jesuit order. It is the soul and the ruling spirit of the whole church. This will remain the same under a new Pope, because this order is indispensable, and at the same time it cannot exist without ruling or wishing to rule.

Earlier (before 1773) this order had many others in the church to counterbalance it, because the other orders were strong and full of life. Now these latter are either powerless shadows or else half willing or half unwilling satellites of the leading Jesuitical stars, and the Roman curia, in order to remain curia, must lean upon the Jesuit—that is, serve them according to their demands in order to preserve her churchly monopolies and her money. And the Jesuits are the incarnation of superstition with despotism.

To rule mankind through the means of Popes that are subject to themselves, that is their intention, their aim and the art through which they attain such mastery. To this end are their struggles to render religion mechanical, the sacrifices of the intellects that they demand, their pressure of the soul to a blind, unthinking obedience, etc.

As it now (since the eighteenth of July, 1870) appears in the Roman communion, what we may expect the next third is that the most monstrous action that ever took place under the dominion of theological doctrine may be accomplished without any loud voice in opposition—I mean the solemn proclamation of Alphonse Liguori as Doctor Ecclesiæ (placing him thus by the side of Augustine, Ambrose, etc;) the man whose false morality, whose mariolatry and whose constant use of fables and falsehoods make his writings a magazine of errors and lies. There is in the whole of church history no example of such a frightful and dangerous mistake known.

And yet every one is silent, and in all the seminaries will the rising generation of clergymen be poisoned with the books of this Liguori.

Certainly such a condition of affairs cannot long endure. Sooner or later a reaction toward something better must come; but from whence or how is hidden from our eyes.

To your third question, What I would advise you to do? I answer: Follow your own convictions, and do not let yourself be deceived by the pretense of unity that must be preserved, and unconditional obedience with which every delusion and disfigurement that surrounds religion is palliated. What we should do in this miserable state of affairs is: To offer to God and the world, and to truth, as it is known to us, the testimony that is due to them. The common indifference that thinks only upon its own conscience, the stupid submission and passive endurance of clergy has brought this evil from the Vatican upon us. The greater the number who will thus recognize it and declare their resistance to this obedience and these false doctrines, the sooner may we hope for remedy.

In haste, with all esteem,

J. V. DOLLINGER.

THE second session of the Denver Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South convened in the Grand Street church, in Helena, Mont., at nine o'clock A. M. on Thursday, July 29, 1875, and was opened by Bishop E. M. Marvin. Seven preachers answered to their names at roll call. Rev. E. J. Stanley was appointed secretary. No preachers were admitted on trial in the Conference. Two were received by transfer. The following statistics were reported: Local preachers, 1; members, 502; infants baptized, 31; adults baptized, 13; Sunday schools, 9; officers and teachers, 63; scholars, 332; church edifices, 8; value, $19,-775; raised for salaries of preachers, $2,881; for missions, $238.05; for Bishops, $80; and Conference collection, $17.

A LAWYER once asked a hotelkeeper the following question: "If a man gives you a hundred pounds to keep for him, and dies, what do you do? Do you pray for him?" "No, sir," replied the landlord; "I pray for another just like him."

WINE is such a whetstone for wit that if it be often set thereon it will quickly grind all the steel out, and scarcely leave a back where it found an edge.

A NET IN SIGHT OF THE BIRD.—It is well known, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, that the Northern Methodist Church gives our brethren in some places no quarter. Where we need fraternity they kick us. Where we are strong they are anxious for hugging. In 1865 the Southern Church was in dire straits—people poor, and buildings burnt. The cry was then disintegrate and absorb. In 1875 new temples have risen on the ashes the fraternal torch left us. Now our ranks are full and fearless. The vinegar is turned to honey. When the fox preaches beware of the geese.

A COWARDLY fellow having kicked a newsboy, the other day, for pestering him to buy an evening paper, the lad waited till another boy accosted the brute, and then shouted, in the hearing of all bystanders: "It's no use to try him, Jim; he can't read."

THE wounds of Christ were the greatest outlets of his glory that ever were. The divine glory shone more out of his wounds than out of all his life before.

WE should press to God through all things, and rest in nothing but in God.—Hudinger.

None of the above are accompanied with instructions; some have no address; others have neither. We only know where the envelopes were mailed by the postoffice stamp on the back. If this should come to the attention of parties interested they will oblige us by forwarding the necessary instructions to whom the amounts are to be credited, and for what purpose. If for the ADVOCATE, give name and postoffice.

NOTICE TO CORRESPONDENTS.

As many do not seem to understand the importance of writing separate letters to the ADVOCATE and book departments, we reproduce an article which appeared some time ago in the paper:

JUST AS IT SHOULD BE.—Some of our correspondents are kind enough to keep their book and ADVOCATE business separate. They never write about the business of the two on the same sheet. Although they may inclose the two letters in the same envelope, they are dated, signed and addressed separately, and distinct from each other. This enables us to attend more promptly to each. When the business is mixed the book-keeper of the department must content himself to wait till it has passed through the other department—order filled, goods shipped and letter answered—before the business of his department can be attended to; and as the book-keepers and clerks of the two branches of business are separate, and file their letters separately, it must be apparent to every man of reflection that much perplexity results from writing about the business of both in the same letter. When money is remitted it should be distinctly stated what for; and if for two or more purposes, how much for each. Write nothing in business letters except that which has reference to business.

SEND ON THE MONEY.

Many of our agents write that they have the money in hand for subscriptions and renewals, but wait till a better opportunity or till Conference to pay it over. We assure them that it is much needed. Last year we were more than $1,000 ahead in the beginning of summer, and by the first of December had consumed this amount and run more than $3,000 behind. It would save us a vast amount of trouble and expense if we could get our money as we need it. An amount of more than $1,500, we think, is now in the hands of agents, which, if we had in hand, would greatly help us.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

THE FLANGE COTTON GIN of the Buffalo make, sold by the clever firm of Messrs. Golson Bros., general agents, 39 Perdido street, is commended to the attention of cotton planters throughout the South. Read the advertisement, and be assured that the agents are clever, reliable and fully responsible, and their guarantee we consider perfectly safe.

JOSEPH GILLOTT'S steel pens are advertised in another column. They are so well known, and so universal is the concession of their superiority, that it is only necessary to say their warehouse is located at 91 John street, New York, under the management of Henry Hoe, sole agent for the United States.

GREGG'S GENERAL SEWING MACHINE DEPOT AND PURCHASING BUREAU.—We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers, especially those living in the country, to the facilities for obtaining articles of various kinds from the city merely by correspondence.

Mr. Gregg is a general dealer in all kinds of sewing machines, and is prepared to fill any order on short notice, and even during the hard times he and his numerous assistants are kept busy in packing and shipping merchandise of all kinds to their numerous patrons.

Mrs. Gregg has special charge of the ladies' and children's furnishing department; and no matter how small your order may be, make it known to her and you will not be neglected. They guarantee satisfaction both in quality and price. See their advertisement elsewhere.

BLACKMAN'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—This long-established school for business education, under the personal superintendence of Prof. Blackman, continues to offer the same inducements to scholars as heretofore. Prof. Blackman, in addition to thorough competence, has great experience in teaching this important branch of education. Boys will find a good home, good fare, kind treatment, and expenses reduced twenty per cent. from former rates. See advertisement in another column.

WOOD-WORKING MACHINERY.—Every reader interested in wood-working should read the advertisement of Messrs. First & Prybil, machinists, 461-467 West Fortieth street, New York. Labor-saving and timber-saving are the characteristic advantages of their machinery.

ORGAN STUDENTS should not fail to notice the advertisement of Clarke's Improved School for the Parlor Organ, a book much needed. We think it will supply a deficiency in the music line that has been generally felt by new beginners.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.—The attention of our readers interested in education is directed to the notice of the chairman of the executive committee in another column.

THOSE of our readers who propose to visit Cincinnati during the coming Industrial Exposition will be glad to know that this paper can be seen on file at the office of E. N. Freshman, advertising agent, 190 West Fourth street, where all facilities will be extended them to read their home news.

Fruit-Drying.

Whenever fruit is dried in the sun, says an exchange, it is exposed to insects, who deposit more or less eggs upon it. If the climate be calm, as in the Atlantic States, the cold weather sets in so early that these eggs are not hatched out in autumn, and the fruit is usually consumed before the following spring; the consumers ignorant of the fact of having eaten with it millions of insect eggs, which become animated with life as soon as warm weather approaches, if any fruit remains. In California and in all semi-tropical latitudes these eggs hatch out before the approach of autumn, and often destroy the fruit before it is required for consumption, and always injure it. Much sun-dried fruit has been shipped to foreign ports, and has been ruined before reaching its destination, and when sold nearer home has been returned to the farmer. Therefore oven-dried fruit is the most reliable, cleanly and wholesome and healthy. Economy and policy all require that the old method of drying fruit be abandoned, unless it can be subjected to some process by which the insect may be destroyed. Fruit dried by artificial means, if carefully watched, is always more wholesome and palatable, and when it is designed to thus prepare it for the home or foreign markets, patent ovens for the purpose should be used, which may be so arranged as to prevent burning, and which will cause the juices of the fruit to dry rapidly, and thereby impart a finer and more natural taste, since the process of drying is quickly accomplished.

PROTECTION TO BIRDS.—The Legislatures of Pennsylvania and New Jersey displayed their wisdom and humanity, a few years since, by enacting stringent laws for the protection of insectivorous birds, and, although a sufficient length of time has not elapsed to prove the immense value of those laws, we shall in a few years learn to know their full importance. A more unmanly pursuit than that of shooting small birds we cannot well conceive of. It is not only cruel, but the farmer who permits his premises to be invaded by such pot-hunters deserves to have his crops destroyed by noxious insects.

If farmers were sufficiently familiar with the value of birds they would be the most earnest advocates for their protection. In France some years ago, a mania for shooting small birds prevailed to such an extent that the field crops were almost wholly destroyed, and so alarming had insect ravages become that the Emperor Napoleon issued an edict absolutely forbidding further slaughter. The beneficial effects were very soon apparent in the crops, and the same result may be looked for in our State in the course of a few years, provided farmers are sufficiently wise to enforce the restraints of the wholesome laws to which we have alluded.

BITE OF A RATTLESNAKE.—A postoffice agent traveling in Texas tells of the successful use of the gall of a rattlesnake as an antidote for the bite of that reptile. In the case spoken of relief was almost instantaneous to the patient, who was writhing in paroxysms of great pain, rapidly swelling and becoming purple. A friend of the writer, who spent several years in California and New Mexico, saw the same remedy successfully used among the Indians in the latter country. In one instance an Indian's dog near the camp was bitten in the nose by a large rattlesnake. The Indians immediately opened the reptile and administered the gall. The cure was rapid and effectual.—St. Augustine Press.

APPLE PIE.—Pare and quarter enough tart apples to lay loosely in the prepared paste; the quarters should not touch one another. Fill the paste two-thirds full of thin, sweet cream, then sprinkle over one spoonful of flour; butter as large as a walnut; cut in bits. Sugar (if a common pie tin is used,) two-thirds teacup full. Grate nutmeg over the whole, as no other flavoring gives the peculiarly excellent taste. Bake slow; if a brown crust forms over the top before the apples cook, stir it under with a knife. If it is not pronounced splendid the fault will be with the apples or not following the directions.

HORTICULTURAL PUN.—Sir George Rose being introduced to two charming young ladies, whose names were Mary and Louise, he instantly added, with a bow: "Ah, yes! Marie Louise, the sweetest pear I know;" a compliment worthy of being named with that beautiful one of Sydney Smith, suggested by the sweet pea. A young lady walking with him in the garden paused to examine a favorite flower, on which she had taken great pains. She remarked: "I am afraid, Mr. Smith, that this pea will never come to perfection." "Then allow me," taking her politely by the hand, "to lead perfection to the pea."

TRANSPLANTING BEETS.—Few people know that the beet transplants almost as well as the cabbage. Almost all people sow their seeds too thick, through fear that some of the seed will not grow. After they are up they find the plants must be thinned out, but after that there will not be enough left to make half the crop they require. In the case of the beet, the thinnings may be transplanted, and they will make nearly as good roots as if the plants grew where the seeds were sown. All that is necessary is to take care that the plants do not wilt; and to this end a little watering or shading may be necessary.—Maryland Farmer.

TO GET animal food for poultry, says a correspondent of the Poultry World, take half a barrel of fresh bones, set them in your poultry-yard, let the flies have access to them for half a day, then cover them over with six inches of fresh loam. In forty-eight hours afterward the fresh meat spoken of above will commence making its appearance, in the shape of myriads of worms, forcing their way through the cracks of the barrels, and will be eagerly sought after by the poultry.

THE report of the Massachusetts Agricultural College says: "There is obviously need of much more investigation and definite knowledge concerning the phenomena of vegetable nutrition and development, and it may be well to remember that we are everywhere surrounded by objects for scientific research demanding our utmost talent, patience and skill, but sure to give ample and profitable results to every diligent inquirer."

AN ASHANTEE BULL.—It seems that stock-breeders are to have a new sensation in the way of fancy cattle. Some of the troops returning from the Ashantee campaign brought with them a bull not much larger than a good-sized goat. The breed of which this animal was a specimen averages very low weight. Those furnished for the commissariat weighed about forty-seven pounds apiece when dressed and ready for cutting up.

CLEANING BOTTLES.—To avoid the dangers attending on cleansing bottles with shot, M. Forbis advocates the use of clippings of iron wire. They are easily obtained, and clean the bottles quicker and better than lead does. The iron is attacked by oxygen, but the oxide does not cling to the glass, and is easily removed by rinsing. In cases where even the minute trace of iron left behind would be objectionable, clippings of tin may be used.

TO RENDER COTTON AND LINEN FABRICS FIRE-PROOF.—M. Patera recommends, instead of long state of solution, a mixture of borax and epsom salts. One part of a mixture composed of four parts of borax and three of sulphate of magnesium is to be dissolved in three or four parts of water, and the fabrics, having been thoroughly soaked in this solution, are to be wrung out, dried and ironed.—American Chemist.

THE bee is very susceptible and any odor unpleasant to him arouses his anger to the highest pitch if not removed. A whole hive of them have been known to load themselves with innumerable fury upon a horse when sweaty, resulting in the death of the animal, unless rescued from their venom.

ROLLY-POLLY.—Make a light paste and roll it out, sprinkle over it a layer of bread-crumbs, grate over this the rind of a lemon, and squeeze over it the juice; then spread over this the best golden syrup, and roll up as a jam dumpling. It may be boiled or baked.

IT IS said the fumes of sugar snuffed up the nose will cure ordinary neuralgia. Put a small quantity of sugar on a hot shovel and try it.

SAYS the New York Tribune: "A candidate for a vacant vicarage in England announces an invention of his own which may prove to be useful. It is a peculiar arrangement of the pulpit, with a clock to give warning. When, at the end of a half hour, the clock sounds an alarm, if the preacher does not conclude within three minutes, down comes the pulpit, with the parson and the rest of the appendages."

NOBODY speaks to Mr. Poor in the street, but very distant relatives of Mr. Rich find him even among the hills.

H. D. ROGERS & CO.,

(Late of Baker, Rogers & Co.,)

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENTS,

22 W. Fourth St. (Merchants' Exchange Building,) CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Orders for all kinds of Merchandise and Manufactured Goods filled at the lowest market rates; and any information needful regarding prices or other matters connected with the trade promptly furnished.

Our office in the entrance to the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 20 and 22 West Fourth street, where its many members are constantly passing, gives us the best of facilities for exhibiting samples of Grain, Cotton and Manufactured Articles, which advantage we offer to those desiring our services.

From the Cincinnati Price Current, March 13, 1869.

"We desire to call the attention of merchants in the interior to the card of Messrs. H. D. Rogers & Co., which is published in another column. This firm proposes introducing a new business, namely: filling orders for any kind of Merchandise or Manufactured Goods to be found in this market, charging only a small commission, thus enabling country merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and indeed all classes, to procure any article they may need at the lowest cash price, without incurring the expenses of coming to the city. And as Mr. Rogers is thoroughly conversant with the city trade in all its departments, and one whose integrity and fidelity to the interests of his customers are of the highest order, no doubts need be entertained by those sending their orders to this firm that they will be faithfully attended to."

Quotations furnished on application. Shippers and others forwarding samples will have their value ascertained, and an offer made, if practicable.

With an experience of twenty years in merchandising in this city, we can offer the best facilities and references. jy22 3m

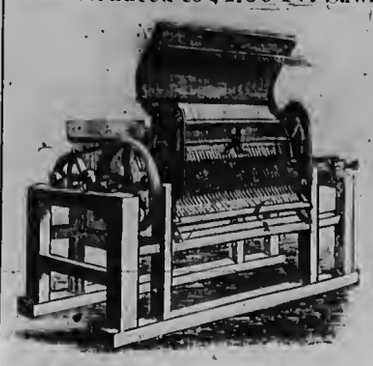
PRATT'S IMPROVED "Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Scientific.

SAVING THE SHINGLES.—A half century ago an old gentleman in southern Massachusetts caused every shingle with which he covered his roof to be first dipped in boiling whale oil. The other day his grandchildren replaced the shingles on the old mansion for the first time, and found many of them in a perfect state of preservation.

—A medical gentleman writes to the Lancet: "In consequence of the difficulty I experienced in removing from a patient a portion of steel deeply bedded in the cornea, which did not yield to spud or needle, some other means of removal became necessary. Dry, soft white silk waste suggested itself to me, and was wound round a thin piece of wood, so as to completely envelop its end. This soft application was brushed once backward and forward horizontally over the part of the cornea where the foreign substance seemed fixed. To my astonishment it was at once entangled by the delicate but strong meshes of the silk, and was withdrawn with the greatest ease, caught by the same. A gentleman in trueing steel at a lathe suddenly felt that a portion had entered his eye. He went at once to a surgeon, who, with the most skillful manipulation, failed to extract the same, saying it would soon work out of itself. The next morning the patient saw me, having suffered severely since the accident, and on the first application the portion of steel was extracted."

—The subject of ocean circulation and currents has attracted a good deal of study in recent years. When land is in sight it is easy to determine the nature of surface currents; but it is not so easy in the open sea. Moreover, the difficulty of finding the nature of deep-water currents is still greater. A new apparatus for these objects, termed a Rheodatometer, has lately been devised by Prof. Stahlberger, of Fiume, and is described in Carl's Repertorium der Experimental Physik. He dispenses with line and compass; and, assuming the stillness of the water a little way beneath the surface, he obtains his fixed point of comparison there, instead of above the surface. The apparatus consists of an arrangement which, dropped (without line) into the water, sinks to any depth the experimenter may previously have decided upon, and then of its own accord comes up again. Simultaneously with its being dropped into the water a separate float is liberated on the surface at the same spot; and when the other piece returns to the surface the relative positions of the two are noted. This idea is variously wrought out for the determination of surface and deep currents, for the details of which we must refer those interested to the original memoir. The author also adapts his apparatus for investigation of the sea-bottom.

FAITH is a living, essential thing. It makes a man entirely new, changes his disposition, and turns him completely about.—Luther.

MASON & HAMLIN CABINET ORGANS.

UNEQUALED if judged critically, UNAPPROACHED in capacity and excellence by any others. Awarded

THREE HIGHEST MEDALS AND DIPLOMA OF HONOR AT VIENNA, 1873; PARIS, 1867.

ONLY American Organs ever awarded any medal in Europe, or which present such extraordinary excellence as to command a wide sale there.

ALWAYS awarded highest premiums at Industrial Expositions, in America as well as Europe. Out of hundreds there have not been six in all where any other organs have been preferred.

BEST Declared by Eminent Musicians, in both hemispheres, to be unrivaled. See TESTIMONIAL CIRCULAR, with opinions of more than One Thousand (sent free).

INSIST on having a Mason & Hamlin. Do not take any other. Dealers get LARGER COMMISSIONS for selling inferior organs, and for this reason often try very hard to sell something else.

NEW STYLES with most important improvements ever made. New Solo and Combination Stops. Superb Elegant and other Cases of new designs.

PIANO-HARP CABINET ORGAN An exquisite combination of these instruments.

EASY PAYMENTS. Organs sold for cash; or for monthly or quarterly payments; or rented until rent pays for the organ.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents burrs, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of rough picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency in any other State the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

On Saturday the sales embraced 162 bales. Middling sold at 14c., but was generally held higher. On Monday the prospect of more copious receipts of the higher grades caused a general tendency to reduce the margin between them and the medium qualities, and, although holders of good middling would be reluctant to accept less than 15c., it would be difficult to find a buyer at more than 14¾c. Middling sold to an increased extent at 14c., but benders, of the same grade, commanded 14¾c. The receipts were more liberal than since the commencement of the new year, but were, nevertheless, only moderate, and we heard reiterated complaints of the unsatisfactory assortment offering. More ample supplies, however, are looked for and an active movement later in the week or next week. The sales summed up 342 bales. On Tuesday with a limited and unsatisfactory stock, the business was confined to 52 bales, mostly on the basis of 14c for middling, which however, could have been bought at ¼c. less. There was nothing in the dispatches to weaken the market, but the demand was limited, and with the prospect of more ample supplies factors were willing to meet the demand freely. In some cases, however, buyers were compelled to withdraw from being unable to find the kinds wanted.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 576 bales, against 425 for the corresponding time last week and 1,085 the week before. We quote:

Ordinary	11¼ @ 11½
Strict ordinary	11¾ @ 12

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

☞ We do not retain dead advertisements.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 8.—The following dispatch was received at the executive mansion this morning, and immediately forwarded to the President at Long Branch:

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 8, 1875.

To President U. S. Grant, Washington, D. C.:

Domestic violence prevails in various parts of this State beyond the power of the State authorities to suppress. The Legislature cannot be convened in time to meet the emergency.

I therefore, in accordance with section 4, article 4 of the constitution of the United States, which provides that the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and, on application of the Legislature, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence, make this my application for such aid from the Federal government as may be necessary to restore peace to the State and protect its citizens.

ADELBERT AMES, Governor.

RALEIGH, Sept. 8.—The convention completed its organization today. All the officers elected were Democrats. Immediately after organization Mr. Tourgee, Republican, offered a motion to adjourn sine die. It was defeated by a strict party vote. One Republican, Mr. Woodfin, and the Independent, Mr. Wilcox, dodged the vote.

VICKSBURG, Sept. 8.—A special to the Herald from Yazoo City this morning says a riot occurred at Satartia last night, in which Dr. Mayben and Charles Rose, white, were wounded. A company left Yazoo City on the steamer Tallahatchie for the scene of action. The negroes of Wolf Lake have three hundred stand of arms. Much excitement prevails.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 9.—Mr. Davis addressed the DeSoto Agricultural Fair. He was well received, but there was no notable demonstration.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 10.—The steamship Nova Scotia, which arrived at this port yesterday from Liverpool, brought Foley's bronzed statue of Gen. Thomas Jackson, the famous Confederate leader, presented to the State of Virginia by Hon. Beresford Hopemand other English gentlemen. The statue cost $4,000 and will be erected in Capitol Square at Richmond, Va., near the equestrian statue of Washington.

RHINEBECK, Sept. 10.—A fatal disease prevails among several droves of cattle near the Ancram lead mines. Nearly all the cattle attacked have died. It is thought the disease was introduced by Western cattle.

AUGUSTA, GA., Sept. 11.—John J. Cohen & Sons, brokers and bankers, have suspended, owing to shrinkage in securities purchased by the house in the last two years. Their credit was unimpaired up to the last moment. Small depositors will be protected. Liabilities not stated.

PORT JERVIS, N. Y., Sept. 11.—There was a heavy frost in this section last night. It is feared the buckwheat, corn and other late crops are injured.

OKMULGEE, Sept. 12.—The General Council of all the Indian nations and tribes, held at this place, before adjourning passed a resolution unanimously repudiating Caddo Boudinot. In regard to the opening up of the territory to the white man, a resolution was adopted, all concurring, expressive of the principle that this is the Indian country by many solemn treaties, and if ever it is settled up it must be by the Indians, with a government suitable for Indians.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., Sept. 12.—Revivalists Moody and Sankey preached at Northfield to-day to immense audiences. They decide upon their revival campaign on Tuesday.

NEW YORK, Sept. 13.—Judge Gilbert, of the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, to-day rendered a decision in a civil rights case, wherein William F. Johnson, a colored man, sought to compel a principal of a public school to admit his son thereto, instead of sending him to a school provided for colored children. The court held that the common schools are a public charity; that the benefits conferred by them are a free gift from the State, and, like every other donor, the State may prescribe in what manner and upon what terms and conditions the gift may be enjoyed.

In conclusion, Judge Gilbert says that the statute, by guaranteeing equal privileges, does not confer the right to enjoy them in common with any class of persons, or in any particular school, and that nothing has been shown from which can be inferred that the relator has been deprived of an equality of privileges to which he is entitled. The motion for a mandamus is denied.

FOREIGN.

PANAMA, August 31.—The latest dates from Central America state that tranquillity prevailed throughout. Nicaragua had agreed to pay a subsidy of $6,000 a year to the Pacific Mail Company, in order that their steamers should touch at the ports of San Juan del Sur and Corinto.

Advices from Ecuador state that the country is at present quiet. At the time of his assassination President Moreno had been elected. The Vice President is in charge until a new President is elected to fill the vacancy caused by his tragic death.

Elections for the presidency of Peru are giving rise to frequent disturbances. The partisans of Gen. Pardo and Admiral Montero never meet but they have a bloody fight. Desperate street fights have lately taken place in Lima and Callao from this cause.

BELGRADE, Sept. 13.—On account of the threatening concentration of the Turkish troops on the frontier the Servian government has ordered the mobilization of six frontier brigades, aggregating twenty-four thousand men. Each soldier must be supplied with one hundred rounds of ammunition, and special precautions are to be taken during the night.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 13.—Serious fighting occurred on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday last, in which the Turks were defeated. This has resulted in the renewal of the siege of Reblenji by the insurgents.

From the Work.

MR. EDITOR: The Eufaula District Conference, Alabama Conference, held its session at Clopton, Dale county, Ala., August 26-29. W. H. Ellison, D. D., presiding elder, in the chair. W. S. Turner and Dr. J. T. Floyd were chosen secretaries. Of the 10 pastors in the district, 9 were present; of the 17 local preachers, 3 were with us; and of the 60 lay delegates, 36 were in attendance.

M. E. Butt, the presiding elder of Marianna district, and three of his preachers—Phillips, Douglass and Sanders—kindly gave us the benefit of their presence, counsel and labors. Clarence McCartha, a local preacher from Georgia, was also present, and was unceasing in his efforts to aid us in advancing the interests of our beloved Zion.

The business of the Conference was transacted without the usual committees. The pastors made verbal reports of the condition of their several charges, and these reports were interspersed with very interesting and profitable discussions.

Attendance on public worship, good; on social meetings and the Lord's Supper, tolerably good. Finances at Eufaula, Gleanville, Villula circuit and Henry circuit, good; at other places in the district, moderate—and at some very moderate. The assessment plan has been most generally adopted, and it is found to work very well.

Generally the Sunday schools are doing well. The principal hinderance to them is the want of interest and co-operation on the part of parents. O that they would appreciate their fearful responsibilities! Then they would arise unto the great and all-important work of the Sabbath school! Many in the various charges of the district do not consecrate their children to God in holy baptism. On Saturday of the Conference Rev. J. W. Glenn delivered a sermon "On the Unity, Characteristics and Perpetuity of the Church" with telling effect, which will doubtless bring forth much fruit by awakening a new interest in the whole district upon the subject of infant baptism. The sermon is unanswerable.

Not many prayer meetings, and only a few class meetings in the district. Comparatively few heads of families have family altars.

We have one mission—Pea River—which has ability in it to be self-supporting if that ability could be brought forth. There are some mission spots among the charges, but the pastors and presiding elder are endeavoring to occupy and cultivate them.

Some revival meetings have been held with very gracious results. Additions to the church were reported as follows: Eufaula, 50; Gleanville, 8; Clayton and Louisville, 8; Villula circuit, 28; White Pond circuit, 33; Henry circuit, 5. Applied for membership during the Conference: Perote circuit, 8; Enon and Midway, 8; and Pea River mission, 34. Total, 180.

The people of the district are endeavoring to educate their children in the primary studies, but they do not seem to appreciate, as they should, the higher branches of education. Few if any of our young men and young ladies are attending our colleges. What a pity!

The preaching of the gospel at our Conference was in the power and demonstration of the Spirit. A gracious revival influence pervaded our whole session. The brethren generally were baptized with the Holy Ghost; penitents came to the altar, and some were happily converted. We all left for home feeling and saying: "The best District Conference we ever attended!"

Our venerable and honored presiding elder, though advanced in years, is abundant in labors, has evidently renewed his youth this year, preaches with great power, and is greatly beloved by us all. May his days yet be many and full of usefulness!

The love-feast on Sunday morning was a precious season, long to be remembered.

Clopton and vicinity abounded in hospitality and kindness, for which many thanks were given.

Thank God for District Conferences! Amen.

W. S. TURNER, Sec.

DEMOPOLIS DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference for the Demopolis district was held at Demopolis, July 15. Dr. A. H. Mitchell, presiding elder, was present and occupied the chair during the sessions of the Conference.

Every preacher in the district was present to report his work, and the reports were, in the main, good. The presiding elder pronounced the reports as to the spiritual condition of the various works to be as good as he had ever heard during his long experience. Everything indicated that the preachers had been working with great earnestness and zeal.

The reports in reference to finances were probably better than at any time previous. Especial attention has been paid by the preachers to the missionary collections. The assessments for foreign missions have nearly all been collected and forwarded to the treasurer. In the matter of money, the reports to this District Conference were exceptionally good.

The Conference was altogether pleasant. The most delightful part was the hour of worship. We had earnest preaching from good men, whose hearts are in the work.

Dr. M. S. Andrews, of Selma, Revs. A. D. McVoy, president of Centenary Institute, T. S. Abernathy, and T. J. Rutledge, superintendent of the American Bible Society, were present and aided in pulpit work.

The Conference adopted resolutions indorsing the action of the board of trustees of the Southern University in electing Dr. L. M. Smith to the presidency of the institution, and pledged renewed effort in the cause of education.

The members of the Conference were generously entertained by the people of Demopolis. Everybody was kind, and the preachers have cause to remember the District Conference held at Demopolis.

The secretary was ordered by the Conference to send an account of this meeting to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and I would here state to the brethren that one thing after another has occurred to prevent until nearly two months have passed; but believing in the old saw, "Better late than never," I send this rough statement.

R. S. HOLCOMBE, Sec.

(Note by the Editor.—The above is a model report for condensation and brevity.)

WAYNESBORO, MISS.—Mr. Editor: The work of the Lord is still going on. Thanks be to his gracious name for the precious outpouring of his Holy Spirit, as has been witnessed in our midst recently during the progress of a protracted meeting conducted by our zealous and much-beloved pastor, James W. McLaurin, aided by our worthy and able brother, J. T. Heard, of Meridian, U. B. Phillips, of Enterprise, and D. A. Little, of Wayne circuit. The meeting continued nine days, with increasing interest each day. Many found the Savior precious to their souls. Many were enabled to rejoice with joy inexpressible and full of glory. Among this number were silvery locks above seventy years of age. Another scene, not less affecting or beautiful, was the administration of baptism and receiving into the church a group of little boys and girls, the eldest not exceeding thirteen, and the youngest ten. God bless the little children! We love to see them turning their faces Zionward, and giving their young hearts to the Lord "while the evil day comes not, nor the years draw nigh when they shall say, I have no pleasure in them." This is Bible teaching, and we know it is right. The church has been greatly revived. There were eighteen new accessions to the church—two by letter. The operation of the Holy Spirit is still going on in the hearts of the people. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Then may we not exclaim, in the language of the psalmist: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name."

Your sister in Christ,

SEPTEMBER 6, 1875.

Editorial Etchings.—Fraternity.—Bishop Keener.

MR. EDITOR: Your paper of the nineteenth instant has just been perused, and, as usual, I have read everything in it, especially your Seashore leader, and the article on Fraternity by three stars. I have been envying you and your friends who were at the Seashore camp meeting—your rich spiritual treat—and read with deep interest all your editorials on that subject; and now you come and tempt my inner man by the description of your feasts daily on fine fish—red at that. Endurance ceases to be a virtue, and if our heavenly Father spares my life I am determined next year to be with you. If it had not been for an inexorable judge, who holds his court in July, in my district, I would have been with you this year.

Now perhaps you think I do not know the writer of the article on Fraternity; but you are mistaken. I can place my finger right on him now if he has not "gone on the Master's business." I agree with him that there is no use hurrying up the matter—it will come in good time; but we of the South should move slowly. Those who seem so impatient about an expression of opinion by the Conferences are in too much haste. Let time regulate this affair, and we will then have nothing to regret. I was in the General Conference of 1870, and was pleased with the action of that body on the question of the reception of the commissioners from the Northern Church. The resolutions prepared and offered by Bishop (then Dr.) Keener, and which were adopted, were eminently wise, presenting the true attitude of the Southern to the Northern Methodist Church, and the profound reasons for maintaining that position then. Since then a step forward has been taken—messengers from the South have been appointed. Wait and see their action, and learn how they are received, and whether the Northern Church will recognize our grievances and settle them. The South will cordially meet the North half way, yea, more, if they come in the spirit of love.

I admire Dr. Poisal, editor of the Episcopal Methodist, but his journal is too fragrant with this pet hobby of his—fraternity. The articles of Judge Jackson are unanswerable, but we are not ready to make the advance movement.

And now, thanking you, as I did through Bro. Mathews, whom I met at Brookhaven, for your series of valuable leaders which have appeared this spring and summer, I in conclusion pray our Father to spare your pen to write many more thoughts that breathe the pure spirit of religion. Yours, READER.

COTTAGE HOME, August 20, 1875.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL COUNCIL.—Mr. Editor: Is it possible that I have to address the Sunday school superintendents again on the council question? What is the matter with them? Have they not this great work at heart, or are they at this season in a lethargic state? Can you not sound the trumpet of duty in their ears and arouse them? I acknowledge hearty responses from Bros. J. W. Adkisson, T. C. Bradford, W. M. Thornton, W. Hoover, Thomas Reid; and verbally from Bros. K. P. Willing and Black.

Dear brethren, let us hear from you immediately. Only one minute's time and a postal card.

Fraternally yours,

B. H. CATCHING.

HAZLEHURST, MISS., September 6, 1875.

TO YOUNG PREACHERS.—I have received about thirty letters from young preachers who propose to attend the Vanderbilt University. This paragraph will answer nearly every one. Brethren, if you come duly recommended (see annual announcement for 1875-76) you will pay nothing for tuition, nothing for room rent, and only about half price for board. This is all our fund enables us to do at present, and for the following reasons: Not more than one-third of those who have given us interest-bearing notes have paid their interest promptly; one-third have failed to respond, notwithstanding all our private and public calls; the other third have given their notes so recently that no interest is due yet. If we can reduce expenses more than one-half, may not the friends of these young brethren, or the Educational Aid Society, assist? R. A. YOUNG,

Secretary Board of Trust.

A YOUNG MAN in California began to read a paragraph about a mine to his sweetheart, commencing, "Yuba mine ——," when she interrupted him with: "I don't care if I do, John."

Blue Laws and the Lord's Day.

A Vicksburg paper recently ridiculed the law closing saloons on Sunday as nothing but a system of "blue laws." Dr. Marshall responded in the following style. We copy, as it is applicable to many other localities.

SALOONS AND THE SABBATH.—THE SUBJECT DULY CONSIDERED.

Recently the Monitor, in two articles, presented its readers an appeal against the laws closing the saloons and drinking-houses on the Sabbath. The theory of the appeal was "blue laws" and "Puritanism," because those are things revoltingly distasteful to Southern sensibilities. Now I would like to ask a few questions suggested by those articles. Is the Lord's day an institution of New England origin? Did the Puritans invent it? Was it ordained by the code of "blue laws?" Was the decalogue constructed by some enterprising Mayflower adventurer? Was Moses a genuine Yankee? Is God the God alone of New England, and are we as Southerners under any obligations to respect a puritanical, Yankee God? Ought the "blue laws" of Mount Sinai, in Puritan land, called in the Boston Primer "Ten Commandments," to be enforced by the mayor of this city?

As we did not elect the Yankee God to his high office, and were not present to vote on the passage of the "blue laws," fanaticism is imposing on us, are we under any obligations to observe them?

Now the God of the "blue laws" (volume 1, chapter 20, sections 8, 9, 10 and 11, New England edition, Moses) has said: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man servant, nor thy maid servant, nor thy cattle, nor the stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it."

But every reasonable man knows, or ought to know, that the author of such a "law" could not have understood the wants, wishes and necessities of a thirsty set of jolly fellows who work hard during the week, and don't care a continental for New England "blue laws," the old Yankee Moses who published them, nor the mythical being whom "Fanatics" tells us dictated them.

And why should the city officials show so much anxiety to enforce this law, when so few of all the laws are brought to bear on the people. We admit, and it is sad, that many of the "blue laws" are a dead letter. There is "law" No. 7 (same volume and chapter, section 14,) and Moses ought to have known we would never regard the sacredness of manly virtue, nor the sanctity of marriage, as subjects on which the "blue laws" had any right to speak. Marriage is but the sacrament of adultery, and "hypocritical Puritans" are trying to rob us of our rights and Sunday refreshments, and other pleasures.

Then there is the unenforced "law" No. 5, about "honoring father and mother." If Moses had only thought of the fact that "Young America" would hate all "fanatical oppressors" with their "blue laws," and the badgerings of antiquated pas and mas who are trying to bring them up to "fear God and honor the King," he would never have wasted his time on such mere twaddle. If no boys, youths and young men visit saloons on Sundays there will be a falling off on week-days, and grateful parents will bless the city officials. A mother had better put her son out in a den of rattlesnakes to be wet-nursed than to have him toled on and trained to spend the Lord's day in drinking saloons.

The Monitor thinks "any man who says bad words will be sharply punished." Yes, and it is right. I would rather a man should strike my son than debauch his imagination with the filth of the brothel. I would rather a son were wounded by a bully than that a gentleman should laugh at God, in his presence, by the utterance of profane, irreverent and hell-inspired "bad words," taking "the name of the Lord in vain." God's name deserves at least as much respect as that of a negro cobbler. And yet we slur over the laws that bear the autograph of God with the persuasive intimation that they are Yankee "blue laws." Hence the cry rings out all over the land: "Down with 'blue laws'"—down with the New England God; down with Moses, and every accursed hilltop where the farce of making blue laws was enacted. "This sort of thing is causing considerable disgust." I dare say it is.

The fact is, France set the right tune to the march of progress. She rose to the lofty height of supreme and ineffable contempt for "blue laws," for Moses and for God. She swore she would have no more of their balderdash, no more restraint, no more worship of God! "Wealth, wine and women" shall be our God, said they. Now, Moses, your God is dead! Take the two stone tables of "blue laws," place one for the head and one for the foot of his mausoleum, and we will pay becoming honors to his memory in bumpers of wine. Let "decades" be ordained as days of "refreshment and rest," and let song and fun and wine and revelry inspire the orgies. God is dead! Reason is God. France is free.

But men have always worshiped something, and will to the end. So be it. Then they enthroned a goddess, beautiful as Cleopatra, and more divine than Venus, and in scornful execration of "blue laws," New England's God, and Moses the penman, lifted themselves in the name of the entire nation out of "the grooves of fanaticism," and bowed down at the feet of a wretched woman in adoring homage. The divinity suited them. They did not fear to take her name in vain. They did not fear to break her "decades" in the open saloons and cafes. Her statutes and laws were recorded in coarsest ribaldry, vulgar jest, licentious song. Democracy triumphed—(false name;) it was an abridgment of hell, where ghouls sputtered, satyrs danced and Dervishes howled; it was the apology of cursing and hate; no Sabbath, no virtue, no God!

Our civilization springs from our Sabbath. It is the tree of life for the healing of the nations. No nation can survive contempt for the Sabbath. A family that habitually violates the Lord's day, and despises the divine worship, comes to naught. A young man who spends his Sabbaths in saloons, at cards, among syrens, base-ball, and low pursuits, must fall of the great ends of life. Sooner or later the mill of God grinds to powder all who despise the laws of life.

And yet we are told along the street that Democracy will lose ground unless the saloons are opened on the Lord's day. If Democracy live alone by drinking saloons, then down with Democracy—down, forever down, eternal fathoms deep! No party, no government, no constitution, no laws, no church, no civilization is worth preserving at the price of the ruin of the morals and slaughter of the souls of the young men—the flower, the hope and the heart of people. Open saloons on Sunday is the open gate to hell.

Rather wage war on all retail drinkeries. Often they are kept by amiable, charitable and clever men. I am their friend. I have no bitter words for them. I hate the work they perform. Men have a right to drink. But let them keep a jug at home.

The generous and gay-hearted German shares his lager beer with his wife and children. If saloons are desirable, make them free, multiply them. Let every home keep an open sideboard and a full decanter. The women at home toil and work, and go round through the daily drudgery of monotonous, commonplace and insipid repetitions of worry and care; and if strong men—healthy husbands and fathers—need four, five, six and more juleps daily, surely the weary women at home need them far more. Be just. Why should the wife and mother enslave themselves, and drudge and save, to help the son and father to spend for liquor and they get none.

But we have no rebuke for any journal nor any correspondent. We do entreat, we deplore, we cry out, and were Christians not more dead than alive there would go up a call too loud and earnest to be unheeded.

Nor do we wish to shackle the freedom of any. We do not wish them to worship as others do, nor go to church to be droned to sleep, nor closeted and catechised from sun to sun on Sabbath day. Be sober, be manly, be proud—too proud to throw yourselves away, as if man were not above a dog—a mere godless, unreflecting, Sabbath-breaking animal, without hope, aspiration or desire of immortality.

A SORELY STRICKEN SETTLEMENT. An Appalling Rate of Mortality.—The mayor of Pensacola has established quarantine against a settlement called Powell's, of which the Gazette of the eighth gives the following particulars:

"This locality is on the eastern shore of the bay, two and a half miles below Milton and opposite Pearse's Point. A letter from W. W. Potter, Esq., of the board of county commissioners, advises us that great distress exists in the settlement, and that a meeting of the board has been called to devise measures of relief. The population was about fifty-six men, women and children, and of these eleven have died within sixteen days—up to yesterday, when twenty-five or thirty were down with the malignant fever prevailing. This rate of mortality is appalling, and the general prevalence of sickness in an isolated community of laboring persons is causing great suffering from mere want. They lack not only medical attention and nursing, but the necessaries of life; and Mr. Potter hopes that government officials may extend some aid. It is said that a man from Barrancas went to this settlement some weeks since, but we have no particular information as to the time or the name of the individual."

SINGING FOR THE MASTER.

Sing on, sweet voice! The Master hears
And owns the service given,
Though throned amid seraphic choirs
That throng the courts of heaven.
Sing on, sing on! What blessed work,
What joyful task is thine,
When voice and chord and praiseful heart
Are tuned by love divine!

Sing on, sweet voice! while angel hands
On shining wings draw near:
Unheard, unseen, they hover round
The human song to hear.
Sing on! Earth's weary ones rejoice
Thy gladsome hymns to raise
And ransomed spirits touch their harps
In unison of praise.

Sing on, sweet voice, in storm and calm,
In grief and gladness sing!
Lure wanderers to the Savior's cross,
And rebels to their King.
Sing on! The joyful hour will come—
When from hope's latest psalm
Thy tones shall pass into the song
Of "Moses and the Lamb."

Times of Blessing.

Zaccheus.

We suppose that Zaccheus was moved to a religious life by ordinary motives—that there was no extra or special convicting grace given him. His difficulties, however, were peculiar and great. So they doubtless seemed to him. So men think and feel now. But, as in all such cases, these very difficulties served to minister to and exalt his success. With a desire to see Jesus difficulties always arise. The evil spirit goes out only with a struggle. This is at once a common and yet an uncommon case for conversion. Zaccheus was a tax collector. Handling public money, his natural cupidity would tempt him to thievery.

He was a tax collector under Roman authority. He had doubtless bought or farmed his district. He collected money from his own people to maintain a tyrant.

He was a chief collector. Doubtless a large district was under his control. This served to enlarge his opportunities for wrong-doing, gave a wider range to his temptations.

He was a son of Abraham—"the degenerate son of a noble sire." He had the contempt of his own people. With them he was a sealaway. He had not the moral forces in the good will of family and friends to sustain him. His own conscience was debauched. He was contemptible in his own sight.

A man thus left alone can easily fall. He cannot easily arise. The wonder is that he will ever arise.

In addition, he had upon him the corrupting influences of riches, obtained through corrupting means in all probability. It is difficult for a rich man to get into the kingdom of God. It is difficult when his riches are obtained by honorable means. The difficulty is greatly increased when gotten by foul means.

There is a significant particularity in the narrative. Zaccheus is brought out in clear relief. We see him socially, morally, religiously, politically and even physically. "He was little of stature." Seeing his difficulties—his point of departure—we can the better examine his conduct. He desired to see Jesus. All the world was curious about Jesus. His fame was great. The Jews especially were full of expectation. In common with other sons of Abraham, this man had many thoughts about the promised One. His, however, was not a mere idle curiosity. And he "sought" conveys the idea of a strong personal desire. There is always good in a man who desires to see Jesus. The promise of such a man grows apace when he desires to see Jesus with strong desire; still more when that strong desire overleaps high barriers—overcomes strong difficulties. Men sometimes desire to see Jesus in a sort of lazy, inactive way. It withers and dies under opposing influences. But in Zaccheus was an earnest spirit. His subsequent action shows it. Vigorous action is the strong child of vigorous thought. Though he was rich, and a publican—a chief publican and a son of Abraham—he ran ahead of the multitude. He added to the contempt of the crowd by climbing a tree. The act of running was bad enough. But to climb a tree! His high office—official dignity—ought to have saved him. His riches ought to have saved him. His contemptible size ought to have concealed him in the multitude. His degeneracy—a fallen son of Abraham—ought to have kept him out of sight. Doubtless thus thought and said the crowd. For the moment even the great Jesus was hid by this little fellow. But when a man has the root of the matter in him, little recks he of the world. His very sense of guilt will urge him on. Adventitious as well as natural obstacles will be made to serve his object. The will begets the way. Men often begin well, but end badly. To them Jesus is concealed by the crowd. They are as effectually concealed from Jesus.

The sequel shows that Zaccheus was not moved by a mere idle curiosity. Such a desire is never rewarded by a healthful sight of Jesus. Herod is a lively case in point. He desired to see Jesus for a long time. He saw him. But how different the result! It reconciled him to man, but not to his God. The curiosity of Zaccheus was of a godly sort. The grace of conviction was in his heart. He felt the necessity of a Messiah. The preparation may have begun under the ministry of John. His conduct shows a large degree of penitence and contrition. No man can desire to see Jesus in any true sense without this grace. John's ministry and baptism is as necessary now as then. The Harbinger must go before. Under this influence Zaccheus shows the very soul of determination, perseverance, importunity and humility. He was in earnest. It was a crisis-point in his life. If he did not see Jesus now he perhaps would never have another chance. His eyes stood out with hunger—his soul leaped forward. Who can tell the extremity of his desire? Two things were necessary to this man: First, to see Jesus; secondly, for Jesus to see him. He saw Jesus. He was in the right place. He was raised above difficulties. The crowd was below him. Jesus saw him. He was in the right place for Jesus to see him. He was individualized before him. Jesus always sees those who see him. They are not concealed by the multitude. Their eyes always meet: "Look unto me." What a glad time for this "little" man! With looking at him Jesus calls him: "Make haste and come down, for I must abide at thy house." And he made haste and came down, and received him joyfully.

Immediately Zaccheus became subject to two cardinal principles of Christianity: First, a principle of active benevolence. "Behold, Lord, the half of my goods I give (will give) to the poor." There is here no fixed standard. It was accepted in this case. In the case of the young man, all was required, because in his case all was necessary. The grace of liberality is a necessity to the Christian life. This is the Spirit of Christ. "If ye have not the Spirit of Christ ye are none of his." We are but the stewards of his manifold mercies. We are but the dispensers of his bestowments. True religion is to visit the fatherless and the widow. To "visit" is to relieve. Professions, prayers, songs, tears, are not enough. Zaccheus also recognized another essential, vital principle of Christianity—that of restitution. When men offer penitence, faith, allegiance to God, it is but an act of restitution. They cannot be just to God and unjust to man. They must be just to man before they can be just to God. The gift is to be left on the altar, and matters made right between man and man, as a condition of his offering. To do the one and not the other is to make a mock of sin. Every truly converted man recognizes this principle. Every true Christian lives by this rule. The typical or representative confession is upon the lips of Zaccheus. He stands before us a great sinner, saved by a great Savior. Giving the half of his goods to the poor, and restoring four-fold in restitution, he became a poor man. So all men become poor—emptied of self—that they may be rich in Christ.

Reminiscences.

There are hours long departed, which memory brings,
Like blossoms of Eden, to twine round the heart;
And as time rushes by, on the night of his wings,
They may darken awhile, but never depart.

Well and truly it has been said that "early impressions are the most lasting." It is the moral and religious training bestowed upon us in our early years that gives impress to our lives, the effect of which continues to color and operate upon our after existence. There are periods in the history of life which recall old scenes and encircle the past with a halo of glory. When surrounded by old associations the mind naturally reverts to past incidents, some of which linger around the heart like the hues of evening. We first recur to childhood, when life was like a summer's day, bright, beautiful, buoyant with happiness. It was in the old framed church, a rude but time-honored temple (since supplanted by a simple, neat structure,) that we received the rudiments of instruction from the minister whose hair was slightly silvered by the frosts of many winters, which, thrown from his noble brow, added greatly to his venerable appearance. We learned to love him with all the reverence which firmness, dignity and a mellow piety inspires in childhood. We would fain gild the dark hours of the past with the light of those joyous years. But, alas! where are the companions and classmates of those golden hours? An echo from the voice of years responds, in hollow tones: Gone! Scattered, like autumn leaves, on the wings of time. Some are filling useful spheres in life—"lights in the world;" some dragging out a painful existence—"cumberers of the ground;" while others lie entombed beneath the shadow of the church, there to slumber until the voice of God awakens the pale sleepers from silence and repose. Far back in my infantile years comes a vague recollection: that of my father leading me by the hand into the old church, to class meeting, of which he was leader—such as were common in the "good old days of Methodism." While in my tender years my honored parent was removed by death to an upper sanctuary, leaving a godly example sweetly embalmed in the memory. Then came the well-remembered period—that of a blighted, stricken heart—a Christian mother whose footsteps I still followed to the house of God. She filled her accustomed seat near the sacred desk, "a true worshiper." Years wore on, and she too passed away. Who can tell the blessed influences of a mother's training? The impress made by her pious example still lives in the heart, and shines like a far-distant star, whose gentle beams fall in silence on the weary, drooping spirit.

It was in the class meeting, while sitting beside my mother, that a blessed influence came over my spirit. An invisible presence seemed to fill the very atmosphere. The gentle winds, sighing softly and rustling through the surrounding foliage, seemed to speak a language to my heart—an undefined sense of God, heaven and hereafter. I there resolved, in answer to words kindly spoken by the pastor, to become a Christian on arriving at the years of womanhood. The interval between girlhood and maturity was marked by many conflicting emotions. A deep sense of responsibility, the force of religious training and the promise made in class meeting were bearing heavily on my conscience. An aching void filled the heart. To openly avow the feelings caused many painful struggles. It was not till sorrow rudely touched the fair hopes of the future that I gave my heart to God—the brightest spot in all the past. A new hope of heavenly origin sprung up in the soul, lighting the inner mind with all the holy aspirations of a new-born nature. As the vale of years advances may the early lessons of parental teaching shed a radiance over life's pathway, and, like a beacon light, cheer us on through each darkened scene of earthly conflict, while faith and hope point to a light beyond—a light that no cloud can obscure—the ineffable light of the "Sun of Righteousness."

NEW HOPE, La.

Objectionable Methods.

MR. EDITOR: A communication in the last ADVOCATE, making some strictures on the method, often adopted, of conducting protracted meetings in our church, struck the writer as a word uttered in season. Whatever in our worship or religious customs is not the outgrowth of Wesleyan discipline or doctrine may and ought to be freely commented upon among ourselves; and the charge of schism or disaffection toward Methodism ought not to be lightly brought against one who, like "Methodist," ventures in a proper spirit to utter some serious words of disapproval of methods sometimes adopted by ministers of our church in conducting revival meetings. While it is true that these objectionable features may have the sanction of long usage, and doubtless have been resorted to by many worthy ministers of the gospel, yet your correspondent ("Methodist") utters the belief of many, very many, that these things do more harm than good; and the writer will venture to affirm that wherever, on revival occasions, these excessive and ill-judged demonstrations are practiced, they are hinderances to the work of awakening rather than aids; and many who, if the services were conducted "decently and in order," would be deeply impressed, go away offended. Especially is this the case with intelligent adults and persons of mature age, who entertain serious views of religion, and have a purpose, at some future day, of connecting themselves with the church. Such persons are often repelled rather than attracted by undue and excessive importunity; and, in like manner, strategical movements employed to force them to outward demonstrations of repentance, such as are mentioned by "Methodist," and have been witnessed by the writer, are not only of doubtful propriety, but fall short, very short, of successful results. If these things, Mr. Editor, meet with disapproval in our own household, and if our censure of ourselves be well founded, should we be surprised if the enemies of our church magnify and distort them to our grievous hurt? I am sorry that "Methodist" did not notice one other objectionable feature, often noticeable in our revival meetings. Had he done so he would have so completely expressed the views of the writer that there would have been no occasion for this communication. I refer to the confusion often created on such occasions by mingling song and exhortation together. I have seen a congregation singing, filling the house with a volume of sound, and at the same time two and sometimes three ministers exhorting in a vehement manner, when scarcely a sentence uttered by them could be heard! The feeling produced was one of distraction. Surely we need not resort to such doubtful manifestations to carry on the gospel work. Such agencies do not affect favorably thinking men and women, and our ministers ought to inquire: First, are they scriptural? and secondly, do they produce good results?

OBITUARIES.

DIED, at East Pascagoula, Miss., at three A. M. on Tuesday, the tenth of August, 1875, of yellow fever, IRA CORINE BRADFIELD, in the twenty-fourth year of her age.

At the same place, from the same disease, at half-past four P. M. on Thursday, the twelfth of August, 1875, DR. WILLIAM A. BRADFIELD, aged twenty-six years.

At the same place, from the same disease, at half-past eleven A. M. on Friday, the thirteenth of August, 1875, ROBERT B. BRADFIELD, aged twenty years.

Dr. William A. Bradfield located at East Pascagoula last December, at the solicitation of warm friends there, and in the practice of his profession found a profitable and growing business, and very soon won the confidence and esteem of the entire community. He was not a Methodist, but was a child of the church, having been raised by Methodist parents.

When quite young he married a young lady who had been raised in the Episcopal Church, and whose devotion to Christ and the church of her choice led him to unite himself to the same church. In his last illness he had the prayers and tender sympathies of the Rev. Mr. Jones, a Methodist minister, of Moss Creek. He was fully conscious of his approaching end, and expressed an earnest desire to see his father and dear young wife before he died; but they were telegraphed to make no effort to go to him, owing to the malignant type of the disease. His loss has not only left a bereaved, almost heart-broken young wife, parents and brothers, but it has left vacant in the hearts of his friends a place difficult to fill. His laudable ambition and untiring energy, with fine physical, mental and moral attainments, gave promise of a long life of prosperity and happiness. But God's ways are not as man's. With his suffering family we share a bright hope that we shall meet him again, where death and pain shall separate us no more.

Robert B. Bradfield had for several years been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and since childhood was noted for his manly, chivalrous character, united to a refined, almost feminine modesty, which on first acquaintance led one to the opinion that he was unsociable. His high sense of honor and dignified bearing made him a great favorite among the professors, and the exemplar of the most honorable of his fellow-students, at the University of Alabama, where he had just graduated with distinction, taking the degree of A. M. a few weeks before his untimely death.

The writer attended the university commencement of 1873, and was told by the professors that he was one of the brightest and best young men who had ever attended the university. His college reports were always a source of great pleasure to his devoted parents, and in their loss they feel that their dear child Robbie, in the morning of life, pure and untarnished by contact with the polluting influences of the world, or the bitter trials which await all who journey through a long life, has only gone home a little before them to occupy that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Ira Corine Bradfield was the second child and only daughter. From infancy she has been the pet and pride (I had liked to have said idol) of not only her immediate family, but of relatives and friends. "None knew her but to love her." Richly endowed with personal charms, that quickly attracted and permanently held the tenderest affection and sympathy of her friends, she was also intellectually and morally possessed of rare qualities in one so young. With rapid discernment of character she chose her intimate companionship wisely; yet with so much genuine kindliness of heart did she treat her least intimate companions and acquaintances that they felt honored by her friendship. It is a matter of wonder that the adulation of her most intimate friends had wrought no evil in her young girlhood, humored, petted and tenderly beloved as she was. Her judgment was almost instinctive, and she very seldom erred in her estimate of persons, or in principles of human action. Where she loved, it was with a devotion to the abstract principles of truth, not blindly. To those whom she most tenderly loved would she most readily point out a fault; yet she was never censorious, but always ready to cover the shortcomings and errors of friends with the mantle of charity.

Her religion was not pharisaical, though she loved the forms and ceremonies of the Methodist Church, and was especially devoted to a thorough cultivation of church music. Her soul was filled to overflowing with the beauty and poetry of music and flowers.

Her young life has been almost without a single care save the bleeding of a tender heart for others' woes. Like a bright cloud evoked by the rays of the setting sun, then dissipated while blazing in purple and gold, she has gone from us so suddenly that it impresses us as if some horrible nightmare had wakened us from pleasant dreams. We give her up as we have some cherished flower, as we watched it fade and die, with a full faith and conviction that in due season it would bud and blossom into beauty and fragrance again.

O loved one, how we sigh to be with thee in that

"Home of the soul,
Where no storms ever beat on the glittering strand,
While the years of eternity roll!"

Just before leaving for her pleasure trip to Pascagoula she walked out to the croquet ground in front of her father's residence, with her mother, in the mellow twilight, and under the wide-spreading branch of a stately oak, in full view of the house, and in hearing of the cheerful home voices, saddened by the approaching separation, she said: "Mother, when I die bury me here in the midst of this cheerful scene, and if you die first I will place you here." O God! that she should have gone from us to die so soon, in the midst of strangers, to yield up her young life without one tender embrace or endearing farewell, and to be buried with strange hands

"By the sad sea waves."

Adieu, Ira, dearly beloved, adieu, till we meet "over the river, under the shade of the trees."

These three were the children of Dr. John and Emily F. Bradfield, of Uniontown, Ala., and this is the first affliction of the kind which has ever visited their once happy household. Human sympathy fails to afford consolation to these bereaved ones; but time, with its erasive hand, will mellow down the roughness of this terrible affliction until nothing but the memory of their virtues will be left in the picture of their happy lives and untimely end.

F.

MISS AMANDA JOSEPHINE PEACOCK, daughter of N. B. and Martha Peacock, was born in Coffee county, Ala., May 4, 1857, and died at three o'clock P. M., August 22, 1875, aged eighteen years, three months and nineteen days.

From childhood she was thoughtful, reflective and kind. Early in life the moral faculties were strongly developed. Her perception of truth was clear, and her sense of right binding. Consequently her whole life was beautiful and uniform. As she advanced in days and years she grew in the powers of mind and soul, and in beauty and sweetness of spirit. However, she never made a profession of religion till the fall of 1872. At the China Grove camp meeting of that fall she professed to enjoy saving grace, and at once joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Because of her blameless life before conversion her consciousness of the great blessing was not as distinct as it is in some other persons. She never "shouted the praise of the Lord," but, like Mary, would utter "with joyful lips:" "My soul doth magnify the Lord."

Sister Josephine was beautiful and attractive both in personal graces and spiritual endowments. She was universally loved and admired by all who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. She was an ornament to the church, a blessing to her parents, a delight to her brothers and sisters, and a charm to good society.

In the early part of last May she was prostrated by consumption. From the first to the last of her sickness she seemed to understand her condition. Although believing that she was certain to die, she never expressed any fear or alarm at the prospect; but, on the other hand, gave frequent assurance to inquiring friends of her "calm repose in God, and trust in the Lord Jesus Christ." So, on the beautiful and glorious afternoon of the fourth Sabbath in August, without a struggle or sigh, she fell asleep in Jesus. In the afternoon of the next day I had the mournful pleasure of preaching her funeral sermon to the largest congregation ever assembled at Wesley chapel. Then the tearful multitude, led by the Grangers, committed her body to the faithful keeping of "mother earth," till God calls her forth in her glorified body to the mansions of the skies.

ANGUS DOWLING.

AARON A. BOULTON, of Jasper county, Miss., died in the communion of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, May 11, 1875. Bro. Boulton was born in Orangeburg district, S. C., in 1805; removed to Perry county when a small boy, thence to Jasper county in 1838, and professed religion at the Hopewell camp meeting, in October, 1841.

Bro. Boulton was for a long time an acceptable member of the Methodist Protestant Church, and when the union of the churches in Mississippi was effected cast in his lot with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. His conversion was bright and happy, and led to a life of Christian devotion. He loved the church, and assisted in maintaining her institutions by his liberality and regular attendance upon her means of grace. He was hospitable at his house, and more especially so to ministers of the Lord Jesus. His friends will long remember his cheerful disposition and the hearty manner in which he entertained them at his home. He was a successful planter, and scarcely was unknown at his table. He governed his household well, and his sons are growing up to be useful and orderly citizens.

The earth has concealed his beloved form from our sight, but his remembrance still lives in our hearts. He left behind a large family and numerous relations to mourn his loss. May they all tread the pathway of Christian faith and meet our dear brother in heaven.

E. J. TAYLOR.

BETHIAH BOULTON, the wife of A. A. Boulton, was born in Orangeburg district, S. C., July 9, 1813, professed religion in 1838, and died in the communion of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, May 21, 1875.

Sister Boulton was also a devoted follower of the Lord Jesus. Her firm faith, her unwearied attention to household duties, her even disposition and untiring industry are traits of her character well known to her most intimate friends. Her daughters are following her example, and imitating her holy faith and domestic virtue.

Much of Bro. Boulton's success in life was due to the frugal habits of Sister Boulton. She cheerfully shared his toils and encouraged his efforts. When God in his providence called the husband away she remained only for a short time, and then followed him, with whom she had so long associated, through the dark valley and shadow of death.

E. J. TAYLOR.

DAVIS STOCKTON was born in Burke county, N. C., November 22, 1800. He died of paralysis on the twelfth of February, 1875, in Calhoun county, Ala.

He was married to his now sorrowing wife on the twelfth of September, 1830. He was born of the Spirit on the tenth of October, 1839, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and when the Northern portion seceded he adhered to the Southern, and was faithful and true to all the interests of the church. He was afflicted for more than a year before he died, but he endured his sufferings with patience and meekness. Bethel has lost one of her most zealous and faithful members. Considering his means, he was one of the most liberal and prompt supporters of the church. He would ride many miles through heat or cold to pay his quarterage and missionary money in due time. I wish thousands were as familiar with him as the writer has been. His examples would prove a blessing. He was a Methodist of the true type, and I am sorry that he is gone. He professed and practiced experimental religion, and died in triumph.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

Whereas, Our heavenly Father has seen fit to call from our midst our friend, Mrs. GERTRUDE DURDEN, who was a member of this Sabbath school; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in her death we recognize the hand of our heavenly Father, and have additional evidence of the fact that he is no respecter of persons—that the young, fair and promising are as liable to be torn from our fond embraces as the old and decrepit; and while we deplore her loss on account of her virtues, as evinced in her acts of kindness in all the relations of life, and most especially in the sick-chamber, administering to the wants of the afflicted, we feel that all that we can do is to meekly submit to the will of our heavenly Father, and tender to the bereaved family our sincere sympathies.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the family of the deceased, that they be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and that they be placed upon the records of this Sabbath school.

MISS MOLLIE HUNDLEY,
MISS LOU. WILKINSON,

CRANMER'S MARTYRDOM.

One of the most noteworthy passages in Tennyson's "Queen Mary" is this account of the confession and death of Cranmer:

I shall declare in you my very faith
Without all color.

COLE.

Hear him, my good brethren.

CRANMER.

I do believe in God, Father of all;
In every article of the Catholic faith,
And every syllable taught us by our Lord,
His prophets and apostles, in the testaments,
Both Old and New.

COLE.

Be plainer, Master Cranmer.

CRANMER.

And now I come to the great cause that weighs
Upon my conscience more than anything
Or said or done in all my life by me;
For there be writings I have set abroad
Against the truth I knew within my heart,
Written for fear of death, to save my life,
If that might be; the papers by my hand
Signed since my degradation—by this hand.
(Holding out his right hand.)
Written and sign'd—I here renounce them all;
And, since my hand offended, having written
Against my heart, my hand shall first be burnt,
So I may come to the fire. (Bends it over.)

PROTESTANT murmurs.

FIRST PROTESTANT.

I knew it would be so.

SECOND PROTESTANT.

Our prayers are heard!

THIRD PROTESTANT.

God bless him!

CATHOLIC murmurs.

Out upon him! out upon him!
Liar! dissembler! traitor! to the fire!

WILLIAMS (raising his voice.)

You know that you recanted all you said
Touching the sacrament in that same book
You wrote against my Lord of Winchester;
Dissemble not; play the plain Christian man.

CRANMER.

Alas, my Lord,
I have been a poor loved plainness all my life;
I did dissemble, but the hour has come
For utter truth and plainness; wherefore, I say,
I hold by all I wrote within that book.
Moreover,
As for the Pope, I count him Antichrist,
With all his devil's doctrines; and refuse,
Reject him and abhor him. I have said.
(Cries on all sides: "Pull him down! Away with him.")

COLE.

Ay, stop the heretic's mouth. Take him away.

WILLIAMS.

Harm him not, harm him not, have him to the fire.

The manner in which the great Protestant martyr welcomed his fate is thus recited by an eye-witness:

Enter PETERS.

HOWARD.

Peters, my gentleman, an honest Catholic,
Who followed with the crowd to Cranmer's fire,
One that would neither misreport nor lie,
Not to gain paradise; no, nor if the Pope
Charged him to do it, he is white as death.
Peters, how pale you look? You bring the smoke
Of Cranmer's burning with you.

PETERS.

Twice or thrice
The smoke of Cranmer's burning wraps me rolled.

HOWARD.

Peters, you know me Catholic, but English;
Did he die bravely? Tell me that, or leave
All else untold.

PETERS.

My lord, he died most bravely.

HOWARD.

Then tell me all.

PAGET.

Ay, Master Peters, tell us.

PETERS.

You saw him how he passed among the crowd;
And ever as he walk'd the Spanish friars
Still plied him with entreaty and reproach;
But Cranmer, as the lion shoulder'd the hell
Steers, ever looking to the happy bay in
Where he shall rest at night, moved to his death;
And I could see that many silent hands
Came from the crowd and met his own; and thus,
When we had come where Ridley burnt with Latimer,
He, with a cheerful smile, as one whose mind
Is all made up, to haste put off the rags
They had mock'd his misery with, and all in white,
His long white beard, which he had never shaven
Since Henry's death, down-sweeping to the chain
Wherewith they bound him to the stake, he stood,
More like an ancient father of the church
Than heretic of these times; and still the friars
Pelted him, but Cranmer only shook his head,
Or answer'd them in silent negatives,
Whereat Lord Williams gave a sudden cry:
Make short! make short!" and so they lit the wood.
Then Cranmer lifted his left hand to heaven,
And thrust his right into the outer flame;
And crying, in his deep voice, more than once,
"This hath offended—this unworthy hand"
So held it till it was all burn'd before
The flame had reach'd his body; I stood near—
Mark'd him—he never uttered moan of pain;
He never stirred or writhed, but like a statue,
Unconscious in the greatness of the flame,
Gave up the ghost; and so passed martyr-like.

The Bonn Conference.

We are yet without definite reports, says the New York Observer, of the final action of the conference at Bonn on the Filioque question, the knot which it puzzled the members to untie (or to tie up more obscurely) so as to satisfy Romanists, Old Catholics, Greeks, Russians, Anglicans and Protestants. But we copy from the London Christian World of August 20 a brief account of the meeting:

According to the notice, the object of this gathering was first to bring about a united common confession of those main doctrines of Christianity which were held by the original and undivided church. Secondly, it was sought to secure a church confederation which, without swallowing up all the churches in one, or interfering with their unity, doctrines, constitution or ritual, should lead each church to admit the clergy of the others to take part in its services and sacraments. In short, the reunion of Christendom was aimed at by the assembling together of a comparatively few members of the Anglican, Old Catholic and Greek Churches. The English delegates—if delegates they might be called, for people attended in no official capacity—were headed by Dr. Howson, Dean of Chester; Dr. Liddon, Canon of St. Paul's; and Dr. Sanford, Bishop of Gibraltar. The Old Catholics were led by Bishop Reinkens and Dr. Dollinger; the Orientals and Americans were less numerous. Considering that the invitation extended to all gentlemen of theological culture, the attendance—some one hundred and fifty in all—must have been the very reverse of encouraging to the promoters of the conference.

In opening the proceedings, Dr. Dollinger introduced the debates in an address occupying upward of an hour in delivery, in the course of which he explained the negotiations with the Eastern churches concerning the proceedings of the Holy Ghost. The confession of faith which Dr. Dollinger gave the Greeks was on the procession of the Holy Ghost from the Father and Son; and this, Prof. Osinnin, answering for his co-religionists, could not see his way to accept. The forenoon meetings were conducted in German, and the afternoon meetings in English. At the first afternoon meeting a letter was read from the Bishop of Winchester, explaining the validity of English orders, which led to a discussion not altogether flattering to the Anglicans present. A Bavarian Lutheran clergyman having obtained permission to speak, criticised the whole proceedings of the conference, and dwelt on the folly of trying to bring about a union which should rest on mere dogmatics and orthodoxy. Dr. Schaff, an American Presbyterian, and a delegate to the recent Presbyterian Conference in London, also raised a jarring note by speaking as a Protestant. At a subsequent meeting, when the question of the procession of the Holy Ghost was again taken up, Dr. Dollinger said three-fourths of the conference were agreed on this point, and at his suggestion a committee was appointed to draw up a form for future consideration. The object of the committee, Dr. Dollinger explained, was to find the dogmatic expressions and formulas best adapted for agreeing with the Eastern Church, not different from the general Western form.

Canon Liddon thought they might make the following concession: "The Holy Ghost proceeds eternally from the Father alone, in the sense that the Father alone is the Fountain of Deity, but also, as we believe, through the Son; while for ourselves, subject to the future decision of a truly Ecumenical Council, we retain the formula that the Holy Ghost proceeds from the Father and the Son; we do not believe that there are two Principles or two Causes in the godhead, but we believe in one Principle and one Cause." The concession is the word "alone," which belongs to the Eastern theology.

Dr. Howson felt that both parties should be left to go on as before, and proposed as follows: "That while the Orientals are left free to retain their customary form 'from the Father,' and the Westerns free to retain their larger form 'from the Father and the Son,' both agree that 'from the Father through the Son' expresses accurately the theological truth held by both."

Dr. Schaff made the third proposition to the effect that the passages of Holy Scripture telling us the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father, but is sent by the Father and the Son, were sufficient for the basis of church union.

The committee, after a lengthened consideration, agreed to recognize the Ecumenical Councils and theological decision on the question of the ancient undivided church; also that the addition to the creed, "and from the Son," was not ecclesiastically justifiable, and agreed to reject all provisions or representations of doctrine which would suppose two Principles or Causes in the Trinity. The negotiations with the members of the Eastern Church afterward resulted in an agreement upon the doctrine of the procession of the Holy Ghost in all essential points.

During one of the debates Bishop Reinkens protested that it was not an expression of opinion on dogmatic points that would serve in the struggle against Rome. It was the spirit of love and unity of purpose which were to be secured. He expected little from theological agreement as to expressions of dogma.

William Tennent's Trance.

The story of it has often been told, and yet it will bear repetition. He was at the time studying with his brother Gilbert, in New Brunswick, and so urgently applied himself to his books as to fall sick apparently with consumption. During his sickness his religious hopes became obscured, which added to his weakness, and carried him fast toward the grave. One day, while conversing with his brother in reference to his spiritual condition, he fainted and died to all appearances. The body was laid out according to the usual custom, and an hour appointed for the funeral the next day. His regular physician, however, who was much attached to him, was absent from home at the time of his supposed death, and on returning at evening was exceedingly surprised at the event, and after examining the body expressed doubts as to whether death had actually taken place, thinking that he could perceive a little warmth in the region of the heart. He begged, therefore, for the privilege of attempting to restore consciousness, which was very reluctantly granted, for the relatives were perfectly satisfied that the young man was dead. The funeral, however, was postponed till the third day, the physician meanwhile using every means of restoration within his power, but in vain. The third day and the time of the funeral arrived, when the determined doctor begged for one hour more; and when that was gone, for half an hour more; and when that was gone, for a quarter of an hour more. By this time Gilbert, at whose house the strange scene was passing, became somewhat impatient with the physician, and, entering the room, declared that it was shameful to be thus working over a dead man, and demanded that the funeral exercises should immediately be proceeded with. At this critical moment the supposed corpse opened its eyes and groaned, and in the course of two hours more was restored to a sort of consciousness; yet his recovery was very slow, and for a time extremely doubtful. And when, at length, assured as to his bodily life, his friends discovered, to their consternation, that he had no knowledge of his former life or acquirements. The work of his education was begun over again by teaching him the alphabet, and proceeding through the lessons of childhood. But one day, when reciting his Latin lesson from Cornelius Nepos, he suddenly started, clapped his hand upon his head, hesitated a moment, and then said: "It seems to me I have read that book before;" and in a short time the memory of his former knowledge came back to him as of old.

But the most interesting features of the case are his experience during the three days in which he was apparently dead, and the influence that it had on his after life. He never alluded to it descriptively, except when pressed by his friends to do so; for, he said, it was, like Paul's rapture into heaven, unutterable. It was something so sacred and so far beyond the power of earthly language to describe that it was almost useless and well-nigh sacrilegious to attempt any narration of it. He promised, however, to leave among his writings some account of it. But he died amid the confused times of the Revolutionary war, and his papers were lost or destroyed, so that we shall never have a minute description of this precious experience. But suffice it to say that he felt himself transported to heaven, where he saw an indescribable glory, and heard unspeakable words and unearthly music; and was just about to join himself to the happy company of angels when his attendant put his hand upon his shoulder and said: "You must go back." This gave him a pang, so that he groaned, and, opening the eyes of his body, saw the physician and his brother bending over him, and realized that he was yet (as again) on earth. The period of his absence did not seem to him more than twenty minutes, but it gave him such a view of the glory and reality of heaven, and of the comparative insignificance and unsubstantiality of earthly things, that he became ever after chiefly engaged with "that world," so that it was with difficulty that he could attend to earthly matters sufficiently to keep his material interests in proper condition. For three years, as he averred, that heavenly scene was never out of his mind, and during nearly half a century that he lived after it to preach the gospel, it stamped him peculiarly as an embassador from the other world. His oblivionsness of earthly matters and methods seemed in some instances an apparent damage to him, bringing him into various difficulties. Yet God provided for him.—Rev. F. L. Chapell, in the Standard.

Difficulties in the Scriptures.

The difficulties of the revelation in the Bible are strictly analogous to those of the revelation in nature. "In both we see a self-concealing, self-revealing God, who makes himself known only to those who earnestly seek him; in both we find stimulants of faith and occasions for unbelief." There are apparent anomalies in the phenomena of the material world, but their general uniformity teaches us that these are only discrepancies in appearance. There are difficulties in applying the great doctrine of gravitation, as in the case of the tides; but we feel that they arise not from any want of universality in law, but from our ignorance of the conditions of the problem. There are also difficulties in Scripture; and shall we not rest assured, from that divine wisdom which we can discern, that they spring only from our ignorance of the circumstances on which the question turns? If the gospels had presented on formal offenses, how soon should we have heard objections drawn from the general course of God's dealings. How readily should we have been reminded of the plausibility of human forgeries, and of the mystery of Divine Providence. It would have been even said that the advance of Christianity—which must be folly to the Greek—was due to the beauty of its external form and the perfection of its superficial smoothness, and not to the power of its inner truth; whereas, at present, the discrepancies of Scripture lead us back to the Author of nature; and as we do not question his eternal presence, though many details of his operation transcend our knowledge, so neither need we doubt the perfect inspiration of the Scriptures, though frequently we may be unable to recognize the treasure of God in the earthly vessels which contain it. The difficulties of Scripture are useful as unfolding the true analogy of God's works. But, "not to rest in this school of nature," we must remember, in the midst of the doubts and perplexities which so easily beset us, that at present "we know but in part" the facts and the bearings of revelation. Dim views of a wider scope and a more perfect wisdom are ever open before us. Faith looks forward as well as inward; and even now we see enough whereon to rest securely the first foundations of our hope, possessing our souls in peace till "that which is in part shall be done away"—till the glorious buildings of the New Jerusalem and its heavenly splendors shall be fully disclosed, whereof at present we can but discern, amid the mists of earth, wondrous pillars and buttresses, or through some dim window the distant rays of that glorious Sun—even the Lamb of God—which shall at one time illumine the holy city.—Westcott, in "Study of the Gospels."

REV. MR. HAMMOND, a noted revivalist, who has labored with great success in San Francisco, at a meeting in that city, said:

"If there is an infidel in the house, a man who says, 'I don't believe in the Bible or in Christianity,' let him rise up. A young man, a civil engineer, arose. Rev. Dr. Cox sought out this young man in the inquiry meeting, and, finding him to be honest in his skepticism, he urged him to seek the solution of his doubts by prayer and the reading of the Bible. The young man finally promised the doctor that he would go home and read the fifty-first Psalm on his knees. He kept his promise, and while reading he was convicted of sin. His skepticism vanished. He sought and found salvation through Christ, and last night stood up before the great congregation and told his experience. Dr. Cox says quaintly that the fifty-first Psalm is his favorite prescription in such cases."

A LOQUACIOUS blockhead, after babbling some time to Lord Erskine, observed he was afraid he was obtruding on his lordship's ear. "Oh, not at all," said Erskine; "I have not been listening."

WRITING on the subject of pulpit elocution, Mr. Spurgeon says: "B natural is the best note for a preacher; but this we cannot expect from A flat."

Religious Intelligence.

—The Independent notes 4,816 additions to the churches as the result of revivals.

—The union of the United Greek with the Orthodox Russian Church is steadily proceeding.

—The upper house of the Prussian Diet has passed bills for the suppression of convents and relative to the administration of church property.

—The Presbyterian Church South, in Louisville, Ky., of which Dr. S. R. Wilson is pastor, has applied for admission into the Presbyterian Church North.

—"A Glasgow Church Planting and Evangelization Board" has been formed in that city by the United Presbyterians. The United Presbyterian Church has fifty-five congregations in Glasgow.

—The district returns of the English Wesleyan connection, those from the Isle of Man only being wanting, show a total of 355,443 members, a net increase of 6,366 from last year, 26,524 on trial, 96 candidates for the ministry, and 40,812 new members.

—A Japanese dispatch says that, terrified by rumors of smallpox, the natives are flocking to the idol Nin, the belief being that whoever will crawl between its legs is safe from the disease. From all directions the crowd comes, creeping like a great flock of rats.

—The Wesleyan Committee of Privilege of the British Conference have been convened by the president in reference to the forbidden inscription on the tombstone at Owston Ferry. The question in dispute has a far wider bearing than the title of "reverend," and it is believed that legal opinion will not support the right of a parish incumbent to forbid the inscription.

—It was openly declared by the late Grand Vizier of the Turkish empire that conversions from Mohammedanism must be an impossibility under a government that rests upon a Mohammedan basis. The threatening attitude of the authorities at present suppresses all signs of a spirit of inquiry among the Turks, further than what is indicated by the constant sale of portions of Scriptures among them.

—The Corpus Christi processions at Munich have heretofore always taken place upon boards furnished by the King, and laid down in the streets for that purpose. This year the boards were already distributed, but on the morning of the procession were removed again, and for the first time the procession walked on the uncovered pavement. The number taking part is said to become smaller every year, and the liberals at least generally expect that the processions, which, with their accompaniments, are little better than an outrage, will soon be prohibited by law.

—A contributor to the Jewish Messenger, of New York, in enumerating the advantages enjoyed by his people in the United States, specifies the fact that here "Jews are elected to offices—national, State and municipal—without a word being said against them on account of their race. In this connection it is noteworthy, he adds, that the Christian religious papers, nearly all of which are edited by ministers, though they are continually abusing each other, and threatening dissenting branches of the churches they represent with all sorts of eternal uncomfortableness, seldom or never speak of the Jews in any terms other than those of respect and kindness."

—An Indian of the Wyandot tribe, attending a monthly concert, and hearing what missions had done for other tribes, rose and said, when he thought of all that had been done by the missionaries, that his heart was almost too full for him to speak. They had come to his tribe about the same time that others went to the Choctaws. But they met a very cold reception. In a council of the nation they were advised to go away. They were told that their religion did not suit the Indians—that their God was not the God of the white man. But they persevered, and God blessed them, and the result with them—the most northern tribe—had been just the same as described by his brother from the most southern. They, too, had their missionary society, and when the first member, an old warrior, laid down his subscription he said: "There! take that, and give the gospel another push."

—During the last few weeks ex-Father Gerdemann has been lecturing in Philadelphia. Upon several occasions infuriated Catholics have attacked him, and it has been necessary for the Protestants of that city to protect him. On July 28 he delivered his lecture, "Ten Years in Priesthood," to a crowded house. Upon taking his place on the stage he was greeted with three cheers. He said that reform in the Catholic Church was simply impossible. He then proceeded to give his reasons for leaving the Catholic Church. This he did from principle, for the last few years were most unhappy to a man preaching what he did not believe. For hours he prayed for enlightenment, and arose from his knees an avowed Protestant. After speaking of certain general doctrinal points, he proceeded to the character of the priesthood. He said if the people of the country knew the immoral character of the priests they would drive them from the land. He knew priests who had not been ten years in the priesthood and now have fortunes of from $30,000 to $50,000. A great portion of the money goes to gambling and drink. The money was also spent for great dinners. The great curse of the priesthood in this country was drunkenness, of the extent of which he could give no adequate idea. He knew of several priests now ministering in the diocese who had several times suffered from mania a potu, and a majority of the priests who had died since his residence here had died of intemperance. He then spoke of the celibacy of the priesthood, saying the priests were called fathers, a name in too many cases sadly appropriate. The extent of this immorality was fearful.—Central Christian Advocate.

Our Young People.

SO HAPPY.

I'm really just as happy
As ever a child can be—
As happy as a spring bird
When it sings up in a tree,
And as happy as the little brook
That dances to the sea.

I'm happy in the morning,
When all the world is light;
I'm happy in the evening,
When the stars are shining bright,
And happy when I'm fast asleep
In my little bed at night.

I'm really just as happy
As ever a child can be—
As happy as the singing brook
That dances to the sea;
For everybody loves me so,
And God is good to me.

Hearth and Home.

From Our Little Friends.

FAYETTE, MISS., Aug. 7, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: As many children are writing to you, and you seem to encourage them, I will write too. Like the rest of the children, I have been deeply interested in Grandpa Goodale's stories. He must be a good man. I would like to know him. But I am anxious to hear "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." He keeps us waiting a long time. Perhaps he is teaching us a lesson of patience. I know he is too good to disappoint us. But I read in my Bible that "hope deferred maketh the heart sick." Please tell Grandpa Goodale my heart is getting sick. We children are not alone in this. I notice the grown people look at the Child's Corner first to see if there is anything about the bays' nest. But I must wait the pleasure of the good old man who is so kind as to instruct us in the Child's Corner. His account of bees was very interesting to me. I have read it carefully, and think I will remember the many strange things he tells about them. But I object to Tom's big words. When grandpa goes to tell about the bays' nest I want Tom to keep silent, for I want to be able to read and understand every word. I asked pa if I might get a big word and send it to Tom. He said: "Yes." So here is one I found in the Visitor. I think it will just suit him. I will try to write it, though I can't pronounce it: Zygodactyli. Tell Tom to explain it to me in the next ADVOCATE. I am most twelve years old, am a member of the church, and I try to be a good boy. My brother and sister are younger than I am, and father says I must set them a good example.

Your friend,

BENNIE LEWIS.

BUCK CREEK, JACKSON CO., MISS., September 3, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I write you a few lines to insert in your corner if you have space. I want to tell you about our Sunday school picnic, which came off on the seventh of August. There were a great many people present, and all the officers, teachers and scholars. We now have one hundred and forty-one scholars, and the school is prospering finely. I wish you could have been here to enjoy the day with us. Our secretary says he invited you; but as I did not see you I presume you could not come to see us.

My father is a subscriber to your good ADVOCATE, and we are always so glad to get it. I always look for the children's corner. All of our family belong to the Sunday school but ma and little baby brother. I have four sisters and one little brother. Father is our superintendent. As this is my first effort at a letter I will close. I hope you will excuse all errors and omissions, and I will do better next time. My sister Alice is going to write to you before long. I am just ten years old. Father says he wants to educate us all.

I am truly your little friend,

EMMA C. ROBERTS.

JASPER COUNTY, MISS., Aug. 20, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl six years old to-day. I cannot write myself, but my ma writes for me. We live away out in the country, and have no school or church near us; but ma teaches me, and I can spell and read. I have read through my third reader, and can read the ADVOCATE, and, like all the other little folks, am very anxious to hear "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." But I reckon Grandpa Goodale knows the best, and will tell us in his own good time. I will try and wait with patience. I do not go to Sunday school, but ma makes me get a Sunday school lesson every week. My pa and ma are Methodists, and I am a little Methodist too. Our preacher is Bro. Holland. He had a sweet little girl three years old, but she is an angel now.

I must close or I will weary your patience. I will write again if I live until I am seven. Until then goodby.

MARY ALICE LIGHTSEY.

PORT HUDSON, LA., Sept. 4, 1875.

DEAR EDITOR: I wrote to you some time ago, not expecting it to be published, but for some books. I received the books and was very much pleased with them; and, seeing that my letter was published, I thought I would write again. My crop is doing very well, and I hope I will make enough to help the missionaries some. I love to read about the missionaries, and to help them all I can. We have a Sunday school at Pipkin's chapel, and a missionary box, and I put in all I can. We organized a temperance society under Dr. Harman not long ago, but it is not doing much, as it has rained so much. I love to read the ADVOCATE, and am glad when it comes. We would be glad if Tom and his frogs would fall asleep some night, and give Grandpa Goodale a chance to tell about the "boys' nest." I must close.

Your little reader,

WALTER LITSCOMB.

GALLMAN STATION, Sept. 2, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: Seeing so many little boys and girls writing to the ADVOCATE, we have decided to write too. We love to read the letters in the children's corner. We are only two brothers, and have one sweet sister. We are seven and five, and sister is three years old.

Mamma died last February, and told us to be good children, and we are going to do it. Papa is alive. We live with grandpa and Aunt Dollie, and sister lives with Aunt Mollie. Mr. Editor, ask God to take care of us, so we will be good children and go to heaven, where mamma is.

Your little friends,

EDGAR AND JOSIE BROWN.

The Worm that Lived in a Chestnut.

Once there was a little worm that lived in the very heart of a fine, large chestnut.

How he got there he never knew. In fact I don't believe he ever thought anything about it; but there he was, snug and warm, with plenty to eat, and a tiny hole to let in the air.

The nut was lying on the ground with a number of its relations, among some autumn leaves, and the wee worm could hear the leaves whispering together whenever the rude wind came that way.

"Oh, how frightened we are!" they would say. "The trees have let us fall, and soon we shall be blown we know not where."

"But we need fear nothing," said the chestnuts to each other. "Chestnuts can't be blown about like dry leaves. True the wind, when he's in a very great hurry, gives us a little roll, but that's only fun—it don't frighten us a bit."

As for the worm, he said to himself, because he had no one else to say it to: "I'd rather be even a leaf than a worm in a chestnut, no matter where the wind blew me, for then I should at least see something. It's awful stupid being shut up here."

Well, one morning there was a sound in the wood that was neither a song of the birds, the whistling of the wind, nor the whispering of the leaves.

It was the sound of childish voices, and the little worm heard the children running gayly about, shouting to each other.

"O dear! O dear! I think they are after us. This is worse than the wind."

But the worm said to himself: "I hope they'll let me out of this poky little house, so that I may go about and see what a wood is really like."

Just then he felt the "poky little house" lifted from the ground, and a girl called out in great glee: "I've found a great big one—a splendid one!"

Then a sharp, cracking sound nearly stunned him, and he felt the top of the chestnut cave in, and heard the girl give a shrill scream, and cry out in a very different tone from that she had cried out in before: "Oh! a horrid, horrid worm!" as she flung it with all her strength far away from her on the grass.

"Don't care!" said the worm to himself. "Now I can come out anyhow."

And he came out and was nipped that very moment by a sparrow, who was hopping about on the ground looking for something for dinner.—The Methodist.

READY-MADE HONEY-COMB.—A sparrow, who often looks into the conservatory belonging to the house where he makes his home, tells me that he has there seen a flower which resembles a ready-made honey-comb, with a drop of honey hanging from each petal. He thought the bees would give up working if they saw this flower. The gardener calls it Hoya carnosa. When I told this to the bee, who visits me every day, he was quite indignant.

"Tell Mr. Sparrow," he buzzed, "that appearances are deceitful; that it is only the raw material for real wax and honey that is kept by the flowers. We bees must do the manufacturing business ourselves." From "Jack-in-the-Pulpit," in St. Nicholas.

TRIAL OF MR. TONGUE.—Mr. Tongue was charged with being "an unruly evil, full of deadly poison," and, in proof of the charge, the law-book was produced, and a passage cited from James iii, 8. The defendant replied that if it were not for Mr. Heart, who lived a little way below him, he should be as innocent as his neighbors, Mr. Nose and the Messrs. Eyes, and, in support of his position, he cited a passage from the same law-book, Matthew xv, 18. The court decided that the defense was a sound one, and that nothing really good could be expected from Mr. Tongue until a radical change should take place in his neighbor, Heart.

A BOY who is not strong enough to spade up a small onion bed between now and the fourth of July, will dig over a ten acre lot before breakfast looking for bait.

Knowledge of Conversion.

A respected correspondent wishes us to say what we think about the knowledge of the time when converted. In our experience meetings, as we wrote some time ago, some testify that they know when, others that they do not, while all agree as to present assurance of their acceptance. We should be content to leave the matter just as we find it in the living witnesses of justification, with the obvious conclusion that some do know and that some do not know when.

It is a great blessing and comfort to have had this passage from death unto life made clear and rapturous to the consciousness at the moment of its occurrence. It would seem to be the privilege of penitent seekers thus to enter into life, and to have at once the witness in themselves. So we preach, and we urge all to claim Christ as a present Savior. But we would not cast out those who have slowly arrived at the point of comfortable assurance, and who cannot indicate the day and hour. Justification or pardon cannot be otherwise than instantaneous, but that instant may not always be recognized. Perhaps it might have been, possibly it ought to have been, but for some reason it was not. We have met with mature Christians who in retrospecting were able to fix upon the probable epoch of their pardon, though they failed to realize its nature at the time. With a larger knowledge of spiritual things, and in the light of a riper experience, they were able to comprehend what was not clear at the time. Doubtless there are some instances of infant justification that have not been lost, and these of course would be beyond the domain of memory. In the case of adult persons, however, we suspect that there is often some misapprehension.

Conversion must be preceded by repentance, and this must have been a matter of knowledge. There must have been renunciation of sin, submission to God, looking to Christ, and a solemn acceptance of the covenant to serve God and to keep his commandments. Do not adult persons thus repenting, and thus entering into covenant vows with God, remember when? And if after this they led religious lives, enjoyed rest and peace, and were delivered from condemnation, is it not likely that they were then converted, and that they should have so regarded it? That revolution in purpose and practice which takes place in the soul when we come out from the world, and begin a life of prayer and faith, in most men is too well marked to be forgotten. Pardon and regeneration may have followed, or they may have occurred at the time the final surrender to Christ was made. The witness of the Spirit is doubtless given in different degrees of strength, and in cases where there is but a low degree there is sometimes no conscious recognition of adoption. This recognition is withheld until a maturer experience or a brighter manifestation compel it. In some instances, long after the determined step of discipleship has been taken, in secret prayer or in social devotion the heart has been strangely warmed. It may not have been regarded as the momentous hour, but perhaps it was. A careful examination and analysis of their experience will show, we believe, that many who think they do not know, really do know, if they do not shrink from the test.

We accept the statement, however, as true, that some converted people do not know the time. Some of the best Christians we are acquainted with belong to this class. The main thing is to be a Christian, and to have now a comfortable persuasion and assurance of pardon, and a change of heart. Where the knowledge of the time is clear it will not do to rest in this. There may have been backslidings since and the loss of spiritual life. Those who have had limbs amputated tell us that they feel them still. Like these phantom limbs is the past experience of conversion in some. A great and wonderful blessing may thus become a snare, and the soul is resting in an illusion, and is practicing upon itself a fatal self-deception. There is occasion for the divine admonition: "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith; prove your own selves. Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?"

To those who know, and to those who do not know the time, the word of warning comes with equal force. The one may build on the past assurance, the other may undervalue the gift of the Holy Ghost, and both may be damaged by dogmatizing upon experiences which are anything but complete exhibitions of the whole truth. In reference to this discussion and the opinions which it has elicited, we would quote this Scripture: "Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Political Disturbances.

The canvass now going on in Mississippi has already been attended with violence and bloodshed. Whoever may have been to blame at Clinton and Yazoo City, the results are likely to be damaging to the interests of the white people. It is a line of policy, now well defined and illustrated in all Southern elections, for the Republican leaders to stir up strife and incite the negroes to violence. This becomes a pretext for Federal intervention, and for its direction in a manner to support the party of the administration. It is the interest of this party, especially of those political adventurers who are at the head of affairs in Mississippi, to keep the negroes in a state of vassalage, and to excite and perpetuate a spirit of distrust and enmity toward the white citizens. It is the purpose of the party to affect public opinion throughout the nation, and to keep up sectional bitterness and prejudice in order to strengthen and hold the Radical party together. Every riot will be used with telling effect in the State elections North and West, and they will be adroitly utilized in organizing for the great national campaign of next year.

With these ends in view, we know it is almost impossible to prevent the troubles which the emissaries of Republicanism are so studious to foment. This device of our enemies will be worked with vigor and with malicious persistence. They care nothing for the lives of white or black, nor for the material welfare of the country. These will be readily sacrificed to political ends. Even in case of self-defense, where the negroes and their advisers are the aggressors, circumstances will be misrepresented, and the occasion will be used to further the purposes of injustice and oppression. It behooves the friends of order and of good government to study to be quiet, and, if possible, to live peaceably with all men. It may be necessary for communities to organize for self-defense, for the protection of families and for the maintenance of public order, while crowds of drunken, excited and misguided negroes threaten life and property. But there is danger, under provocation, of impatience, and of bringing on a conflict where prudence and calmness might prevent it.

Our Conservative people should direct their efforts to prevent violent demonstrations. They should determine to have peace, and that the laws shall be respected. If there are rash and inconsiderate men in their ranks, these should be repressed and controlled, and not permitted to precipitate commotion and bloodshed. They have no right to disturb the political gatherings of their opponents, nor to put themselves in the way to provoke acts of riot and murder. We do not know that any in the Conservative party have been blameworthy so far, but there is reason for carefulness and vigilance.

Mississippi is, if possible, to be kept under the blight of carpet-bag rule, and the prestige of Republicanism throughout the nation is sought to be restored by stirring up strife and violence between the races. Grant's third term may be easily brought about by manipulating and working up the subject of "Southern outrages." Every outbreak, without regard to its causes, will be taken up, magnified and blazoned abroad by the political press, and the work of slander and misrepresentation will find most congenial allies in religious journals. Fanatics and politicians will unite to distort facts, and to give them the significance which their prejudices and venality may require. For years to come the South will be liable to these broils and uprisings. We may hope, however, that fanaticism will have expended itself after awhile, and that this miserable trick of the politicians will, in the course of time, be worn out and abandoned.

The field for the political adventurers grows narrower, and is now confined to two or three States. Within these limits this vile and mischievous element is in concentrated virulence. It must be met with prudence, forbearance and firmness. Time must be the vindicator and the great pacificator. The South will be understood by the nation some time, and intelligence and honesty will be permitted to govern. Violence is the thing our enemies wish above all things. Our aim should be to disappoint them of this diabolical desire.

Fraternity, and "To Be or Not to Be."

The Fraternity Company have in various ways striven to create the belief that Methodism North is far superior to Methodism South, and by this means to captivate our people and secure our surrender. We are reminded of their untold wealth, magnificent churches, splendid institutions of learning, vast missionary work, immense membership, flaming zeal, sound theology, eloquent ministers. We are treated to essays on their various powers—the woman power, the song power, the spiritual power, and the power to control fanaticism. (Wish they had had this last power years ago, and exercised it.)

Then we are told of the superior quality of the love they have for us to the love we have for them. And, knowing that in almost all our congregations there are a few miserable backsliders and poor sinners, they tell us of camp meetings where all are saints. Such comparisons, open and covert, are certainly designed to excite our admiration and make us pant for this blessed companionship.

But they stop not here. They turn upon us with hard names, such as "stubborn and unyielding," "ill-natured," "bitter in heart," etc., and invite the North to send down her strong men to "cultivate us." Dr. Ives, of strychnine fame, is called upon by name to undertake this loving and necessary work. (Hope if he come he will leave his drugs behind.) In fraternity, as they hold it, they have found "new ground and cause for expressions of gratitude and love" for one another; while they pronounce "woes" upon all who dance not when they pipe, and threaten to crush them with that "moving throne of Mr. Wesley" coming on, so awful and resistless.

Now, although the number of these gentlemen is so small that they may be counted on one's fingers, and although they represent not three per cent. of our membership or ministry, yet they make a great noise, and assume to represent "the vast majority." At home their words are read with feelings of mingled indignation and shame, while doubtless at the North they are read with very great and unmingled pleasure. The reason of this is that those who pull the ropes and touch the springs which regulate this movement think they see signs of the accomplishment of their hopes—of the ends they aim at by fraternity. In other words, the North rejoices in the belief that in this company she has active allies to aid her in securing her purposes on the South.

Properly to understand them, and the work they are doing, it is necessary to keep certain facts constantly in mind.

The first is that they define fraternity not as the South but as the North defines it. This appeared in their conduct at Louisville, and has continued to show itself ever and anon from that day to this. They were exceedingly grieved at the action of the General Conference—apparently more so than the Northern delegates themselves—and have been mourning ever since over what they call that "great blunder," that "sad mistake." To rectify that "great blunder" they seem to have decided to go ahead, and forestall and control the action of the commission appointed to settle difficulties and reciprocate greetings.

The second fact is that the North defines fraternity to mean union—union now or hereafter. This, as stated in a previous article, appears in all her movements for the last ten years. At first she seized our property everywhere she could, and relinquished it only by military orders or decrees of civil courts. Next she actually disintegrated us to the tune of a few preachers, quite a number of white members, and thousands upon thousands of colored members. This all looked to union, one would suppose. Afterward, at Chicago, she resolved to take in all the Methodisms if they would come, and under this resolution Bishop Harris and others met our General Conference at Memphis. Last of all, fraternity was inaugurated, and the Louisville delegates expressed the idea of union again.

The third fact is that union is unity. This is so because Episcopal Methodism (North or South,) under the joint superintendency of Bishops, is neither an association nor a confederation of independent churches and Conferences, but a connectional unit. Bishops are Bishops everywhere—preachers and members the same. A man received at one place is received at every place; or expelled at one place is expelled at every place—one creed, one legislature, one law, one set of usages. To unite with us, as did the Protestant Methodists in many places, is to be one with us; and were we to unite with the North it would not be in association or confederation, but in the unity of a corporate individuality. Such a unity is what the Methodist Episcopal Church has been aiming at, and is still aiming at. And fraternity is the scheme by which she proposes to accomplish this end now, after all others have failed. And this is precisely what these gentlemen declare they understand fraternity to mean. In plain English, they are not for fraternal relations with the Methodist Episcopal Church such as they are willing to have with any other evangelical denomination—a state of things our people all are willing to have. No, no. Such relations, they hold, are impossible. And this foregone fact—this impossibility—is the starting-point of their proposed action. These are their words: "God needs fraternal union. And what he needs he can command and will." "The thing to be accomplished is the unity of Methodism." "Let there be * * * Christian fraternity, and unity will take care of itself. It results, or rather it is necessarily. It requires no making, no producing, no bringing about—it is." If these words mean anything at all, they mean such fraternity, and such only, as will blot out of existence the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

And now is it not time that our preachers and people speak out, and say whether our church is to be or not to be, or rather whether these ambitious doctors should not be arrested and rebuked in their adroit but bold attempt under the beautiful name of fraternity, and while yet enjoying positions of influence and trust, to surrender our very existence to the Methodist Episcopal Church? Improbe amor, quid non mortalia pectora cogis! Let this company stand out in its true character, and "that thou doest, do quickly."

Revivals in East Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: A most extraordinary revival influence extends through all this section. In the Montgomery district the meetings have been of wonderful depth and power. The fire began to burn at the District Conference at Salem. Many hearts were placed anew on the altar of consecration. Ministers went forth with hearts of flame and tongues of fire to preach the glad tidings. Laymen joyfully came forward to help in the glorious work. Union church, Tuskegee circuit, was baptized from above, and had the grace bestowed upon them, even amidst drouth and disaster, to go up to the feast of tabernacles, and pitch their tents on the Texas camp ground, and representatives from Tuskegee station, and the other parts of the Tuskegee circuit and adjoining charges, met them. The power of the Highest was there. Sometimes it was like Bethel and sometimes it was like Tabor. It was a place of clear vision. One lady went with us who had many clouds and doubts and fears. By Monday noon there was not a cloud in sight, and her face was as radiant as the brow of morning. What a good place is a camp meeting to get above the world—to forget it! Said a sister, transported above herself: "Some talk of starvation and some talk of suffering; but, thank God, I am above suffering."

There were some powerful convictions and clear conversions; but the great work done was putting the people of God, ministers and members, on a higher plane of religious experience, where the church draws nearer to its divine Head, and Jesus breathes afresh upon them his gracious Spirit, and the disciples, as in the days of old, "go everywhere preaching the word."

While we were beside ourselves at the camp meeting, Bro. Motley was marshaling his forces for a great battle at Opelika, the gate city of east Alabama. He had held on from the week of prayer. He had hoped against hope, but believed, and went forward. Signs of coming victory multiplied. The church "had a mind to work." Sinners yielded, the prospect brightened. The Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists worked shoulder to shoulder. Bro. Baker, of the Presbyterian Church, stood by with blade unsheathed for the conflict. Bro. Maugum comes to the rescue. Many young men are converted. A young men's prayer meeting is organized—fifty in daily attendance. The morning prayer meeting fills the church, and the Lord fills it with his glory. I went up one morning to see this great sight. I met a great many men and ladies coming from the morning prayer meeting. Every man looked glad. Every face was bright. Nobody careworn and world-weary in that crowd. Every man wanted to tell me the news. "What's the matter," said I, "that all of you look so bright?" "Bro. Ross," said the pastor of the Presbyterian Church, "there's power here." The whole town seemed to be shaken. The revival embraces all ages from ten to seventy. Men are converted at home and at church. Convictions are pungent and powerful. The work goes on!

We are not unblessed in Auburn. Our people, many of them, were at the camp meeting and were blessed. Bro. Loveless began the next Sunday; has been going on a week; has received eighteen members. There have been about twenty-five conversions, and the battle goes forward. The church is full of life, zeal, power.

Mount Zion, Crawford circuit, has had a gracious meeting, and Bro. Maugum begins at Tuskegee on Wednesday next, with the signs propitious for a gracious work.

Yours fraternally,

B. B. ROSS.

Riot in Mississippi.

The following note from Bro. Galloway came a few hours too late for last week's paper. We deeply sympathize with Rev. G. F. Thompson and family in the sorrow that has come upon them. The death of this worthy young man is indeed a great calamity. When will there be an end of violence and bloodshed in this land?

JACKSON, MISS., Sept. 6, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: A riot occurred at Clinton, ten miles distant, on Saturday, which has produced wild excitement throughout the county. Three white men were killed and a number wounded. Among the number killed is the son of Rev. George F. Thompson, pastor of our church at Raymond. The number of negroes killed and wounded is unknown. On yesterday a large number of negroes came in from the country and crowded the Governor's mansion, demanding, we were told, arms from his excellency. There were grave apprehensions that we would have trouble in Jackson. Though a beautiful evening, few ventured from their homes at the call of the church bells to attend public worship. To-day all is quiet, and no further alarm is anticipated. The origin of the riot at Clinton is scarcely known.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

WE DEEPLY SYMPATHIZE with Dr. F. E. Robertson and his excellent wife, Mrs. Mary F. Robertson, in their bereavement. At the family residence, Front Lawn, near Houma, Terrebonne parish, La., their youngest son, Archibald McCollam Robertson, died September 2, aged about four years. Archie was the joy of his home, bright, beautiful and a Christian. He talked of heaven on his death-bed, and left messages for his absent brothers to meet him in that sun-bright clime. May God sustain the sorrowing, and sanctify this severe but loving dispensation. This is an instance in which the word of the psalmist is most strikingly fulfilled: "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger." To us there is nothing more wonderfully beautiful, convincing and comforting than the dying testimony of little children.

REV. J. S. WHITE, of the Louisiana Conference, sends us a notice of his marriage, which took place on the eighth instant. We congratulate him, and extend to the fair Kentucky bride a cordial welcome to the itineraut ranks in Louisiana. Bro. White expects to be at his post in Natchitoches by October 18.

PACIFIC METHODIST COLLEGE.—The number of students at the college, says the Pacific Methodist, is increasing rapidly. Nearly one hundred and fifty have already entered this session. The faculty confidently expect the number to reach three hundred.

Visit to Vanderbilt.

Last week, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt, of New York, son of the gentleman for whom the university is named, visited Nashville, with a party of relatives and friends. On Friday, in company with Bishop McTyeire and Dr. Summers, they called at the capitol where they were courteously received by Gov. Porter and other officials, and were shown through the State-house, which, with its fine views, was of course much admired by them. Of their visit to the university the Nashville American's report will interest our readers. It says: "Now to the Vanderbilt, whose tall towers had been hailed from the first ascent of Capitol Hill. That, of course, was the object of principal attraction. The Governor yielded to the invitation to join the party, and off they rolled, Bishop McTyeire leading off with Mr. Vanderbilt and Gov. Porter in his barouche, the rest following in carriages. The front steps (main entrance) of the university had been finished the day before. The massive building grew upon our distinguished visitors as it grows upon all who survey it, appearing larger and larger as one enters it and passes through its halls and various lecture-rooms. Several young men were just arranging the library, which begins with about five thousand volumes. Before leaving Mr. Vanderbilt authorized the Bishop to draw on him for $1,000 in order to buy a particular set of books. The full library of 'the fathers' is scarce and valuable, especially to theological students. The chapel and museum (now supplied with Ward's complete series of casts, the lecture-rooms, heating apparatus, the law school and divinity school rooms were examined with interest and pleasure. The company took particular note of Prof. Lupton's department, occupying half the basement. Prof. Lupton has introduced the fullest preparations and methods of science. His late residence at Heidelberg, and inspection of the most noted laboratories of Europe, enabled him to introduce models and appliances of Bunsen and other distinguished chemists. No chemical lecture-room or laboratory in the United States will be better fitted up to impart instruction. The apparatus was laid in by the professor in person last fall and winter, and is up to the times—which means a good deal in modern science. The large boxes sent on by Chancellor Garland are not yet opened, with their French, German and other foreign as well as domestic works, but we suppose Mr. Vanderbilt, Jr., knows something of the round sum they cost the commodore's generous purse—instruments illustrating optics, acoustics, mechanics and astronomical appliances. The chapel begins to show its fine proportions, and the work of the plasterers came in for special commendation.

A Terrible Bereavement.

The following note from Rev. G. F. Thompson, of the Mississippi Conference, confirms the sad intelligence of the death of his son, a noble Christian gentleman, who has been called away in his manly prime. We are sure that the afflicted ones will have the sympathy and prayers of all in this hour of trial.

RAYMOND, Sept. 8, 1875.

DEAR BRO. PARKER: I drop you this note to apprise you of the death of our dear son, G. F. F. Thompson, Esq., of Yazoo City, at the hands of the negro mob in the Clinton riot on Saturday last, and to bespeak the prayers and sympathy of all the good in our deep affliction. He was born on the twenty-ninth of March, 1849, in Memphis, Tenn.; baptized in 1850 by the Rev. John M. Steele, of the Arkansas Conference; joined the church on probation at Red Bone, South Warren circuit, near Vicksburg; graduated in law at the university at Oxford, Miss., in May, 1869; married Miss Alice M. Barringer, of the above place, January 10, 1870; and departed this life on the fourth of September, 1875, leaving his wife and a dear little boy and many friends to mourn his loss.

Your brother in very deep affliction,

G. F. THOMPSON.

THE Charleston News and Courier of August 30 says:

Mr. John T. Wightman, Sr., the father of the Rev. J. T. Wightman, of this city, died on Saturday morning last, at his residence on Wentworth street, in the ninety-second year of his age. He was a native of this city, where he resided his entire life. He presented at the end of this eventful pilgrimage a fine specimen of Charleston's "green old age," and it is probable, from his vital force, that he would have lived several years longer had not an attack of pneumonia, followed by typhoid fever, suddenly terminated his days. He was highly respected in the community as a man of strict integrity and industrious habits. He served in the war of 1812, and was one of the first officers of the Washington Light Infantry. He was quiet and retiring in manner, and by a long life of uniform character won for himself the highest encomium of being an honest man. His remains were interred yesterday at Trinity church, in this city.

BISHOP PAINE.—We are rejoiced to learn that our venerable senior Bishop, Dr. Paine, is recovering his health. Dr. Murrah writes us, Aberdeen, Miss., September 2, 1875: "Our sanctuary was irradiated by the sunny face of our dear Bishop Paine on last Sabbath. After an absence of more than six months of suffering, trembling between life and death, it was cheering to us all to see his venerable form in its place in the house of God. He is feeble, but regaining his strength. I imagined the preaching was better than usual, the music was better, the congregation looked better—with us all it was better. I hope the veteran warrior may be able to battle for the Master in a meeting this autumn."—Nashville Christian Advocate.

THE Roman Catholic Church is publishing the grounds on which it proposes to make a saint of Christopher Columbus. They are given in a book on the subject published by the French Count Roselly de Lorgues: This man has made some remarkable discoveries concerning the to-be-holy Christopher. Among them are that the holy see regarded him as its natural legate to the New World; that his real aim in his persevering efforts and voyages was to secure the ransom of the holy sepulcher by means of the riches to be found in the new region; that his heart burned with apostolic zeal, and his life was rather that of a monk than of a man of the world; that he ordained the foundation of a college for foreign missions one hundred and twenty-five years before the Propaganda was instituted, and openly professed the doctrine of the immaculate conception before its definition; and that there is "a mysterious connection between the first Christian that carried the cross into the New World and the first Pope (Pius the Ninth) that ever visited the land of the future." It is further declared that Columbus practiced, to a special degree, every theological and cardinal virtue. All this is news indeed.—Methodist.

ALBANY, ORE.—A note from Rev. T. B. White says: "Our new church at Albany is receiving the finishing touches. It is beautiful—complete. We expect to entertain the Conference well at Albany." Bro. White changes his postoffice address from Corvallis to Albany.—Pacific Methodist.

E. E. F. ROSS, Esq., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

STATE FEMALE COLLEGE.—The above-named college, located in the beautiful suburbs of Memphis, Tenn., with spacious accommodations and a large corps of teachers, offers rare advantages to parents having daughters to educate. We call attention to the card in another column, and can assure our readers that the State Female College is deserving of confidence and patronage.

SEEDS.—Richard Frotscher, dealer in Bulst's warranted garden seeds, is a worthy, conscientious and honest man, and our readers need not be afraid to send to him for any seeds they want, with perfect assurance that they are genuine and reliable. We know of no seed merchant in the Southern country more worthy of confidence. See his advertisement in another column.

THE GRANT ORGANS of S. S. Hamill's manufacture are producing a sensation in the trade and manufacture of church instruments at the East, and we advise all who propose to supply their churches with organs at a cost ranging between $500 and $2,000 to correspond with Mr. Hamill before closing a contract. See his advertisement in this week's ADVOCATE.

CHROMOS AND FRAMES.—E. & H. T. Anthony & Co. are perhaps the largest dealers in their line in the country, and in a business intercourse of many years we can say we have ever found them liberal and obliging, and can cheerfully commend their advertisement to the attention of our readers.

COTTON PRESS.—Reynold's Revolving Wrought Iron Screw Plantation Cotton Press is well known to our planters throughout the cotton-growing States, and there is no lack of witnesses to its many advantages. Send for circular to W. H. Reynolds, Esq., corner of South Market and Fulton streets.

VISITING CARDS.—W. C. CANNON, 41 Kneeland street, Boston, Mass., makes a liberal offer in furnishing visiting cards, and, so far as we can see, a very safe one. See his card in another column.

WANTED—Female Agents.—Mme. Griswold wants ladies only to sell her skirt supporters. See advertisement in another column.

PRINTING PRESSES, from $3 to $350, for sale by W. Y. Edwards, 36 Church street, New York. See card.

MISFIT CARPETS.

—We clip from a New York paper the following extract, which explains the character of the above business:

"Mott Cargots.—Thousands have noticed the above line at the head of a brief advertisement by M. S. Bendall, of No. 112 Fulton street, New York. It is curious to notice what a large business this gentleman has built up, in a business never before prosecuted. His warerooms are the repositories of all the carpets which are cut off and made up, and not paid for by the purchasers, in New York, Philadelphia and Boston. Somebody in Ohio orders from a leading dealer a fine carpet, to be cut and made and sent C. O. D. When it reaches him he cannot pay the bill. Of course the express takes it back. It has been cut for a peculiar-shaped room, and is no longer a salable piece of property. It finds its way next day to Bendall; and at his store to which people flock for bargains, it is seen and bought by some one whose room it just happens to fit, at twenty-five or thirty per cent. under price. This is a great convenience to the world and recognized buyers avail themselves of it. Mr. Bendall is a fine-looking gentleman, cultivated and refined, and his success has been—as it ought to be—great."

AUTOMATIC EYE-GLASS HOLDER. Something new, unique and convenient. See advertisement of Kerbaugh & McDougall, 4 Liberty Place, New York. You will be at once impressed with the convenience of the eye-glass holder.

TO BILLINGS, CLAPP & CO., BOSTON: I wish briefly to speak of Ciarke-Quinine. I have used it ever since it could be obtained, and with the happiest effects. I like it much better than the Sulphate of Q. in the cases of children. There are many agents who cannot take Quinine on account of its distressing effect upon the head. In such cases the Ciarke-Quinine is just the thing. Those who have given it a trial would not be without it.

MEDICAL.

THIS Universal Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all Diseases Caused by Derangement of the Liver.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a Bitter or Bad Taste in the Mouth, Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels Alternately Costive and Lax, Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done, Debility, Low Spirits, a Thick, Yellow Appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a Dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and Death will ensue.

This Great Unfailing Specific will not be Found the Least Unpleasant.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

Last month was one of comparative leisure on the farm—this is one of unusual activity. Much has to be done, and of a character that admits of no delay. The gathering of summer crops, preparation for future crops, and the seeding down of fall crops, all press now upon the active, wide-awake farmer. Cotton needs picking as fast as it opens, that storms may not scatter it on the ground, or rains stain and injure the staple. Pea vines and other late forage crops must be mowed and cured, lest an early frost cuts them down and destroys their sweet, nutritious juices. Land has to be prepared for wheat, rye, oats and barley, and the last two, with clover and the grasses, seeded down; and, finally, stubble and rested land have to be turned over. September and October, on a properly conducted farm, call indeed for about as much activity and management as do March and April:

SOWING FALL OATS.

This is beyond exception the best month to sow oats in all regions where the thermometer does not usually descend below 15 degrees, or where it does get as low as 25 degrees. Farther south it may be better to sow later; farther north we do not know how they would stand the freezes. In exceptionally cold winters, as those of 1871-72 and 1872-73, fall oats are liable to be killed, but that is almost the only risk they have to run, and every crop has some risk. Corn is oftener cut off by drouth than fall oats by cold; of the two we regard the oat crop as decidedly the most certain. Each additional year's experience and observation confirms us in our course of pressing the oat crop upon the Southern farmer, as furnishing the cheapest and best food for mules and horses. Alternate between cotton and oats, sowing oats and cotton in September. Sow the same number of acres in oats that you plant in cotton. The oat stubble will furnish land for cotton well supplied with humus, and the cotton-field will furnish land for oats well supplied with nitrogen.

BARLEY AND RYE LOTS, CLOVER, LUCERNE, ETC.

Winter grazing and soiling lots are invaluable. To have them in perfection they should be seeded down at once. For barley especially make the ground very rich—have never seen a barley patch too rich. The richer the land the less will cold arrest growth, and with rich land excellent grazing can be secured till Christmas, and by the latter part of February the barley will be high enough for the mowing blade or sickle. Pile on manure, sow early and seed heavily—two to four bushels per acre. These are the conditions of success. If one is not prepared or willing to do this, he had better let barley alone, and sow rye instead. It will grow on poorer land, and, other things being equal, will shoot up a little earlier in spring, but is not relished by stock anything like as well as barley. We prefer, however, to have variety—a patch of barley, one of rye, one of oats and one of clover. Succession as well as variety is thus secured. California clover comes forward very early in spring—perhaps earlier than any of the plants mentioned—and may be either grazed or cut, but it is not relished by stock, and in estimating the value of food we would rather trust the palate of animals than the crucible of the chemist. Lucerne is both early and highly relished by stock of all kinds, and every farmer ought to have a patch of it. There is some trouble in getting this crop well established; but, this done, it will last for ten or fifteen years, and one can afford, therefore, to take the trouble. Select a loamy soil, neither too light nor too stiff, have it perfectly cleaned of all troublesome growth—if crab grass has not matured seed upon it for several years, all the better; make it very rich and put in good tilth. Sow seed right away. We prefer to sow in drills eighteen inches apart, that a narrow, flat sweep may be run between them, it being very important to keep down all intruders for a year or two. A very great advantage of sowing now is that the lucerne will get the start of weeds and grass in the spring. In any event it must receive a little working the first year. Twelve to fifteen pounds of seed will sow an acre.

We advise all who contemplate sowing clover and grass to do so this month, and, if practicable, to sow them by themselves, and not with small grain. Grass will require rich land, well cleansed and thoroughly pulverized. Clover may be started on comparatively poor land by sowing three hundred pounds of acid phosphate and fifteen pounds clover seed to the acre. Rolling the seed in plaster and top dressing, as soon as the seed are sown, with stable manure will also insure a "catch."

WHEAT.

In the larger portion of the cotton States the wheat crop is not to be recommended as a money crop, but it is very desirable that enough should be raised for home consumption. A few acres on each farm, if highly fertilized, will produce enough for the family supply. In answer to inquiries we have discussed this crop in recent numbers, and will only add here that surface pulverization is very important to a wheat crop, and, if practicable, repeated plowings and harrowings should be given wheat land between this and the first of November, care being taken to avoid disturbing it when at all wet.

FALL PLOWING.

Keep two-horse plows running whenever practicable, turning under weeds and stubble. It is not necessary to run them very deep, and therefore wide furrows may be cut and much land gone over in a day. Aside from other advantages, when the busy time of spring comes, and wet weather is constantly stopping the plows, one will never regret doing this work in the fall.—Southern Cultivator.

EGGS AS DIET.—On this subject the Poultry Review has the following pertinent and suggestive remarks: Would it not be wise to substitute more eggs for meat in our daily diet? About one-third of the weight of an egg is solid nutriment. This is more than can be said of meat. There are no bones or tough pieces that have to be laid aside. A good egg is made up of ten parts shell, fifty parts white and thirty parts yolk. The white of an egg contains eighty-six per cent. of water, the yolk of an egg fifty-two per cent. The average of an egg is about two ounces. Practically an egg is animal food, and yet there is none of the disagreeable work of the butcher necessary to obtain it. The vegetarians of England use eggs freely, and many of these men are eighty and ninety years old, and have been remarkably free from illness. Eggs are best when cooked four minutes. This takes away the animal taste that is offensive to some, but does not so harden the white or yolk as to make them hard to digest. An egg, if cooked very hard, is difficult of digestion, except by those with stout stomachs; such eggs should be eaten with bread and masticated very finely. An egg spread on toast is food fit for a king. If kings deserve any better food than anybody else, which is doubtful. Fried eggs are less wholesome than boiled ones. An egg dropped into hot water is not only a clean and handsome but a delicious morsel. Most people spoil the taste of their eggs by adding pepper and salt. A little sweet butter is the best dressing. Eggs contain much phosphorus, which is supposed to be useful to those who use their brains much.

THE PROPAGATION OF CELERY.—The Scientific American says that celery is a native of Norway and Sweden, where it grows near the edges of swamps. This plant is rarely cultivated as it should be, hence the stunted specimens which appear in our markets. A deep trench should first be dug, at the bottom of which a layer of sticks of wood, say six inches thick, should be placed, a drain pipe being placed endwise upon one or both ends of the layer. The sticks should be then covered with about a foot of mold, wherein the plants should be set in a row and about five inches apart.

The plants should be kept well watered, the water being supplied through the drain pipes, so that, passing through the layer of sticks, which serves as a conduit, the water is supplied to the roots of the plant. In earthing up, care should be exercised to close the stems of the plant well together with the hand, so that no mold can get between them. The earthing process should be performed often enough to keep the mold nearly level with the leaves of the outside stems. If these directions are carefully observed the plant may be grown at least four feet in length, and this without impairing the flavor, which deterioration is commonly noticed in overgrown vegetables and fruits.

MUFFINS.—One quart of milk, five eggs, one tablespoonful of good yeast—if home-made, three or four—a lump of butter the size of a walnut, and sufficient flour to form a stiff batter. Set in a warm place to rise, and when light bake in muffin rings. Germantown Telegraph.

TO MAKE silk which has been wrinkled appear like new, sponge on the surface with a weak solution of gum arabic or white glue, and iron on the wrong side.

Orders for all kinds of Merchandise and Manufactured Goods filled at the lowest market rates; and any information needed regarding prices or other matters connected with the trade promptly furnished.

Our office in the entrance to the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 20 and 22 West Fourth street, where its many members are constantly passing, gives us the best of facilities for exhibiting samples of Grain, Cotton and Manufactured Articles, which advantage we offer to those desiring our services.

From the Cincinnati Price Current, March 13, 1869.

"We desire to call the attention of merchants in the interior to the card of Messrs. H. D. Rogers & Co., which is published in another column. This firm proposes introducing a new business, namely: filling orders for any kind of Merchandise or Manufactured Goods to be found in this market, charging only a small commission, thus enabling country merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and indeed all classes, to procure any article they may need at the lowest cash price, without incurring the expenses of coming to the city. And as Mr. Rogers is thoroughly conversant with the city trade in all its departments, and one whose honesty and fidelity to the interests of his customers are of the highest order, no doubts need be entertained by those sending their orders to this firm that they will be faithfully attended to."

Quotations furnished on application. Shippers and others forwarding samples will have their value ascertained, and an offer made, if practicable.

PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Scientific.

—A French physician recommends the use of bread mixed with seawater in disease arising from poverty of blood, for convalescents recovering from acute diseases, and for persons of delicate constitution.

—Ladies who admire the rich, heavy stiff black silks which are sold at some shops, at apparently low prices, may be interested to know that a large portion of this richness is composed of salts of iron and astringents with salts of tin and cyanides. The silk is merely a thin skeleton, which supports the adulteration until the goods are sold.

—Tommasi has communicated to the French Academy the remarkable fact that a current of steam under a pressure of five or six atmospheres, made to traverse a copper tube two or three millimeters in diameter, wound in the form of a helix, strongly magnetizes an iron bar placed in the axis of this helix. An iron needle placed several centimeters distant from the steam magnet is strongly attracted, and the magnetism remains so long as the steam traverses the tube.

—Although in the line of original research America has not greatly distinguished itself in botany, the number of those who interest themselves in the study is remarkably large. The botanical works of Alphonso Wood and Asa Gray are widely read. The latter's "Manual of Botany" has already gone through five editions. A few years ago Mrs. Lincoln, now Mrs. Lincoln Phelps, and in her eighty-fourth year, published "Lectures on Botany;" and of these no less than three hundred and seventy-five thousand copies have been sold since the first edition appeared. This speaks well for the love of science among the people.

—In an interesting article by Prof. Alfred Newton, of Cambridge, England, on the birds of Greenland, he gives some account of the occurrence of the great auk in Greenland. The earliest discovery of this remarkable and interesting species in Greenland was in or about the year 1574, when an Icelander, by name Clemens, visited certain islands on the east coast, then called Gunnbjarnareyjar, and since identified with Danell's or Grand's Islands, lying in latitude 65° 20′ N., wherein he found it so plentiful that he loaded his boat with the birds. It has not since been known to occur on that coast. Brunnich, in 1764, did not mention Greenland as a locality for it. Fabricius, in 1780, while giving its Esquimaux name, says that it was rarely seen on the outer islands, and that in winter he had, however, examined a young bird, only a few days old, taken in August. Old birds, he adds, were very rare. The Museum of Copenhagen possesses a specimen said to have been killed on Disco, in 1821; but this is very possibly that which is known to have been procured by Heilmann at the Tiskenes, in 1815. The last examples with certainty known to have existed were killed on Ehley, off the southwest point of Ireland, in 1844.

D. M. HOLLINGSWORTH'S PATENT DOUBLE SCROLL.

The greatest improvement of the age on the old Concord Buggy. Twelve Bolts, instead of four, to hold the Springs and raise them up, so they cannot strike the axles at the end.

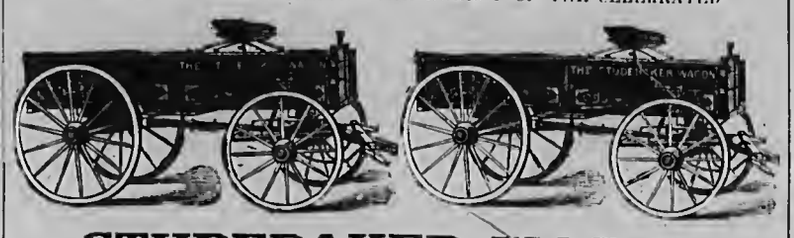
I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED



STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

THE DUBOIS

FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other gins.

The Flange prevents knits, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly picked cotton than other gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to SESAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw. GOLSAN BIRTTLETTS.

Ouachita river	302
Railroads	445
Lake	8
Mobile	527
Texas	103
Total	3,190

On Saturday the inquiry was fair, but operations were restricted by scant supplies of the kinds wanted. Low middling sold as low as 12¾c. The sales embraced 300 bales. On Monday, with more copious supplies, the market opened with a fair demand, but as factors met it freely, some of the sales during the morning were at easier rates, after which, as the extent of the movement was developed, prices exhibited increased steadiness, nearly all descriptions being firm at previous quotations, except gin-cut crops, which were neglected and could be obtained at some concessions. The business embraced 1,400 bales. Low middling was reported at 12¾@13c., strict low middling, with staple, at 13¼c., middling at 13¾c., do. with good staple, at 13¾c., and strict middling at 13⅞@14c. On Tuesday, the supply of desirable kinds having been materially reduced by the comparatively heavy business of the day previous, less scope was afforded to buyers, and the movement exhibited but little animation. The sales, nevertheless, embraced 550 bales, generally at steady prices for well-ginned and good staple kinds, and easier rates for gin-cut, dingy and other neglected descriptions.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 2,250 bales, against 373 for the corresponding time last week and 425 the week before. We quote:

Strict ordinary	11¾ @ 11¾
Good ordinary	11¾ @ 12⅛
Strict good ordinary	12⅛ @ 12¾
Low middling	12¾ @ 13
Strict low middling	13⅛ @ 13⅜
Middling	13⅜ @ 13¾
Strict middling	13¾ @ 14
Good middling	14¼ @ 14½

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges the solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SPRING CREEK CAMP MEETING.—There will be a camp meeting at Spring Creek camp ground, commencing on Friday night before the second Sabbath in October next. One and all are cordially invited to attend. This meeting will be carried out strictly on the self-sustaining plan. We will have a large boarding tent and public lot completed by the time of meeting for the accommodation of any who come unprepared to take care of themselves. Board will be furnished at a reasonable rate. The public feed will furnish a place for sleeping, but no bedding. All will bring their blankets or quilts with them. We want our preachers to attend. We will take care of them.

H. B. NASH,
J. A. EVANS,
D. BREWER,
Committee.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Providence camp ground, fourteen miles east of Hazelhurst, Miss., commencing October 7, 1875. Preachers and people are invited to attend. There will be accommodations, for all who do not tent, at reasonable rates—fifty cents per meal, and fifty cents for lodging. The meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. Brethren, come in the name of Jesus. P. A. JOHNSTON.

THE CAMP MEETING of the Gaston circuit, Demopolis district, Alabama Conference, near DeSotoville, in the northern portion of Choctaw county, Ala., will begin October 1, 1875. The meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. Ministerial brethren from a distance by rail will please be at Cuba station early on Friday morning, October 1. C. H. DUBOSE, P. C.

THE CAMP MEETING for the Rapides circuit will begin on Thursday before the third Sabbath in October. Ministers are not only invited, but they are earnestly requested to attend. The camp ground is six miles northeast of Pineville, on the Bayou Flaggon. "Come one! come all!" J. L. P. SHEPPARD, P. C.

THE Eufaula district camp meeting, at Wilkie Springs, near Mount Andrew, Barbour county, Ala., will commence on Saturday night before the fourth Sabbath in September and continue four days. The preachers of the district are expected to be present, and those outside, both itinerant and local, are cordially invited to attend. Let all come praying for the salvation of the people. W. H. ELLISON, P. E.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Sepulga circuit, Prattville district, Alabama Conference, in Monroe county, Ala., ten miles from Pineapple, Selma and Gulf railroad, and eighteen miles from Georgiana and twenty-two miles from Greenville, M. and M. railroad, commencing on Friday night, October 1. Ministerial aid is solicited. J. M. SCOTT, P. C.

THE Summit district camp meeting will be held at Magnolia, Miss., on the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, commencing October 7, 1875. It will be held strictly on the self-sustaining plan. Ample arrangements will be made to furnish cheap transportation, fare and lodging on said occasion.

C. C. GIBSON,
Chairman of Executive Committee.

THE China Grove camp meeting will commence on Friday night before the first Sabbath in October next, and close on Wednesday morning following. Ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South are cordially invited to attend. ANGUS DOWLING, P. C.

OUR camp meeting will commence at Bethel camp ground, DeSoto circuit, La., on Friday, the twenty-fourth day of September, 1875.

JOHN PIPES, Pastor.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Paulding circuit, Mississippi Conference, twelve miles west of Enterprise, near the Enterprise and Mount Rose road, beginning on Friday night, the first day of October, 1875. It will be held strictly on the self-sustaining plan. There will be conveyance for ministers at Enterprise, Miss., and Newton, Miss., on Friday morning. Ministers are invited and urged to attend.

J. H. HOLLAND, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting to be held on the Saline Bayou, near Pleasant Grove church, twelve miles west of Winnfield, in Winn parish, La., will commence on Thursday night, October 21.

All are invited to come prepared to take care of themselves, as the meeting will be conducted on the self-sustaining plan. Ministers are respectfully invited, and will be provided for.

D. A. BONNIE, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Beulah camp ground, near Fort Jessup, La., commencing on the eighth day of October, 1875. The meeting will be on the self-supporting plan. Provision will be made especially for the preachers. Everybody is invited to attend our camp meeting. J. M. FRANKLIN, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Rachliff's Mill, eleven miles north of Springville La., on the Springville circuit, Louisiana Conference, to commence on Friday, October 1, 1875. Ministers of the gospel are especially invited to attend. PHILIP ALLEN, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting nine miles north of Eutaw, Ala., commencing on Thursday night before the third Sabbath in October. Preachers, local and traveling, are invited.

THE UNFAILING FRIEND.

BY KITTIE HOOKER.

Hearts may ache and hearts may break,
Souls may faint, and failing fall;
Do our best for manhood's sake—
God is just and over all.

Love may go like stars of snow
Melting on life's muddy tide;
Earthly friends but few men know—
God is good and by our side.

There's but one unfailing sun;
Stars are dim and earth is drear;
Something whispers as they run:
"Man may fail, but God is near."

Golden Age.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

PORTLAND, Sept. 14.—One hundred and forty towns give Connor 28,670, Roberts 26,190. The Republican majority will probably reach 5,000, against 10,000 last year.

The congressional contest for the vacancy in the fourth district is close.

The Democrats gain in the Senate. The House is probably unchanged.

BOSTON, Sept. 16.—The State Central Committee of the National Union party, to the number of fifty, met at their rooms this evening. A letter was read from Col. T. R. Stockdale, of Mississippi, expressing cordial sympathy with the new party movement, and pledging hearty co-operation. Also a long letter from Jubal A. Early, of Virginia, expressing the same sentiments.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—The Navy Department has received the following:

Navy-Yard, Pensacola, Sept. 16.—The yellow fever is epidemic at Powell's station, on Pensacola Bay, twenty-five miles above the yard. The people have neither food, medicine nor attendance, and are crying in the name of God for relief. The navy-yard is perfectly healthy.

G. H. COOPER, Commander.

MONTGOMERY, Sept. 17.—The Constitutional Convention adopted the bill of rights to-day. The following section was adopted unanimously: "The people of this State accept as final the established fact that from the Federal Union there can be no secession of any State."

MOUNT WASHINGTON, N. H., Sept. 18.—A snow-storm prevailed on the mountain last night, continuing all day. No trains or stages have passed up or down.

GALVESTON, Sept. 19.—During the storm on the seventeenth the steamship Australian, loading with cotton for Liverpool, went to sea from the outer roads, and was driven ashore at St. Bernard, sixty miles west of this place. Her surgeon and mate arrived to-day, and report the vessel lying in seven feet of water. No lives lost.

The bark Edward McDowell, which was discharging at the wharf, was blown over on the point of Pelican Island, in Galveston Bay, and is now aground in eight feet of water. It is thought she will be gotten off with slight damage. The bayou steamer Beardstown was driven from her wharf, broken to pieces, and is a total wreck. A number of her crew are reported lost.

Dr. G. W. Peete, health officer of the port, was at the quarantine station with his family. On the evening of the fifteenth he sent his family to the city, except his little grandson, who remained with him at the station. On the eve of the sixteenth the storm increased, the water rose rapidly, carrying away the buildings, and the last seen of Dr. Peete and the little boy they were in the old fort, a short distance from the quarantine station. No tidings have been yet received, and it is supposed that both were lost.

The government buildings, with all the material on hand, which was being used in the construction of gabions for harbor improvements, were swept away. A number of men employed on the works came to the city on the fifteenth, and when the water carried away the building twenty-seven men clung to the piling through the night, and all except two were saved by tugs the following morning.

Dwelling-houses on the eastern point of the island and along the beach on the south side were considerably damaged by water. A number of houses were blown down and washed off in the central and business portions of the city. Very little damage was done. It is estimated that $200,000 will cover all losses to property. Very little damage to the wharf or on the bay front from the depot to Bay Ridge.

FOREIGN.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Sept. 15.—The Herzegovinians now appear willing to treat with the consuls. The latest encounters terminated in favor of the Turks. The emigrating families are returning.

LONDON, Sept. 16.—The Madrid correspondent of the Times summarizes the circular of the papal nuncio to the bishops as follows: The nuncio claims the fulfillment of the concordat which forbids the exercise of any non-Catholic creed; requires the transfer of superintendence over education to the clergy, and pledges the co-operation of the secular power in suppressing heretical teaching and literature. He says one of the causes of civil war is the way in which religious unity has been misunderstood by previous governments. For these reasons, in view of these consequences, the holy see believes itself strictly obliged to present these observations to the government.

The Times correspondent adds: No doubt the presentation of this audacious claim at a time when a liberal cabinet has just been installed implies a threat that if the government rejects it the blessing of the church will be definitely transferred to Don Carlos, and peace retarded in every possible way.

HENDAY, Sept. 17.—The families of some of his most influential partisans are endeavoring to induce Don Carlos to conclude peace. Bands of Carlists encamped near Toloso refuse to fight. Their commander has been arrested.

KRAGUJEWACZ, Sept. 18.—The discussion of the address to Prince Milan continues. The government still failed to secure a majority for peace. There are rumors of a ministerial crisis. The situation is grave and uncertain.

QUEBEC, Sept. 20.—Twelve inches of snow. The fruit and ornamental trees are damaged thereby.

From the Work.

SHREVEPORT DISTRICT CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: The District Conference was appointed to assemble at Keachie, La.—the place having been changed from Holly Grove church, Anacoco circuit—and convened August 19. The Rev. S. S. Scott, presiding elder, was present and occupied the chair. The committee plan was laid aside, and the different items were taken up in order and reported upon. However, resolutions were passed upon each subject, which purported to consider and digest the whole of the pastoral reports. The spiritual state of the church, embracing the subject of temperance, exhibited some strange features upon the one hand, and some that were, upon the other hand, encouraging in a high degree. The Sabbath school reports were very meager. Under the circuit regime the Sabbath school is an institution that barely breathes. The chief difficulties in the way are a lack of suitable persons for superintendents, and the unfortunate tendency to union. The interests of the missionary cause were attended to. The missionary secretary's plans for collecting moneys had been canvassed by all the preachers, and were considered impracticable except in stations. The plan agreed upon as best in all places was to take up public collections. The financial condition of the district was found to be simply "deplorable." Only one-sixth of the aggregate salaries had been paid, and one-half of that sixth had been paid to one preacher.

In the line of material prosperity there has been some improvement. Several houses have been built and dedicated, but the majority of our societies are either without churches, worshiping in somebody else's house, or are under most inhospitable roofs, surrounded by dilapidated and uncomfortable walls.

Resolutions commending the Nashville and New Orleans Christian Advocates were passed unanimously.

President Armstrong, of Mansfield Female College, was present, and during a portion of the time acted as secretary.

The delegates elect from this district to the Annual Conference are: Rev. G. M. Stuart, of North Bossier circuit, George T. Simpson, of Caddo circuit, Benjamin T. Spearman, of DeSoto circuit, and Thomas L. Armstrong, of Mansfield circuit. Alternates—R. W. Freeman and John L. Scales. These were all elected as men who would be certain to go.

Red River chapel was selected as the place of meeting for next year. Bro. Prather promises to convey preachers, traveling and local, delegates, Bishop and all, from Shreveport to the chapel and back free of charge.

On Sabbath the Conference joined in a most interesting love-feast and communion, in which also about sixty communicants participated. On Sabbath evening at four P. M. memorial services for the lamented John Wilkinson were held, in which the greatest interest was manifested by an immense concourse of people, who had assembled to do honor to this heroic and devoted man, whose memory will ever be dear to thousands in this part of dear old Louisiana. Having enjoyed a most delightful season and an abundant hospitality, we adjourned, and on Monday morning were all wending our ways homeward. Truly yours,

R. H. A.

GREENWOOD, LA., September 1, 1875.

CLANTON CAMP MEETING.—Mr. Editor: This meeting, the second held at the place, was commenced on Thursday, the second instant, and closed the following Wednesday morning. The ground, about a mile from Clanton, a town on the N. and S. railroad, in Chilton county, Ala., is covered with a beautiful grove of red oaks, and close to a good branch, which furnishes pure water for man and beast.

There were eleven plank tents, including the preachers'. The worship was under an arbor, which, being too low, made it very hard on the voice in preaching and singing, and the more so as there were present only seven preachers—Bros. McDaniel, Blow, Roper, Miers, Solomon, Lightfoot and myself. But the preaching, as the daily results proved, was in demonstration of the Spirit and with power—and all the sermons, except those of one man, were highly satisfactory. From the beginning to the end there was a gradual accumulation of faith and hope and courage, and joy and zeal. The last of the feast was the best, and the closing scenes were really glorious. After a good sermon on the last night sixty or seventy penitents, I reckon, came into the altar for prayer and instruction. After these had been labored with for some time, and it had become known that some of them had passed into the light, all were asked to rise to their feet who had experienced the pardon of sin. About twenty rose up at once. Oh, it was glorious! The preacher then asked the converts and all other Christians within the altar to vacate, so that he might invite others. Upon the second invitation the altar was again filled. The meeting lasted till late in the night, mourners weeping, converts and Christians rejoicing and praying.

The preacher in charge, Bro. McDaniel, received twenty-four into the church, and baptized about twenty. He estimated the number of converts at about thirty-five. The brethren will have another next year. They need camp meetings in that region, where Hard-Shellism has reigned so long. The church will be built up and instructed in all doctrine this way sooner and more certainly than in any other way.

The pleasure of the meeting was marred by the absence of our esteemed presiding elder, Bro. Shores, who was kept at home by his terrible misfortune. The church remembered him, however, and prayed for blessings upon him and his family in their deep distress.

By the way, permit me to say that the action of Bro. Scott's Quarterly Conference in reference to Bro. Shores was very beautiful, and it is to be hoped that all the preachers will collect Bro. Shores' salary and remit it to him as soon as possible. A man true and tried as he is should be specially cared for under such afflictions as now distress him.

J. W. RUSH.

OZARK CIRCUIT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: On Saturday before the fifth Sabbath in August we began at Claybank church, and closed on Tuesday night after. The congregations were large and serious from the first to the last service. The church was greatly blessed and cheered. Several were converted and four received into the church, and two still on application. I was aided by the local preachers who reside in this part of the circuit, and by Bro. T. J. Fain, an exhorter and class-leader.

On Wednesday night, September 1, the Marianna District Conference convened in Ozark, on which night the introductory sermon was preached by the Rev. H. M. Gillis, of Greenwood circuit. On Thursday morning at nine A. M. the Conference was organized, with the Rev. M. E. Butt, presiding elder, in the chair, and Revs. W. S. Rice and W. D. Owen elected secretaries. The attendance of the delegates was the largest ever seen in this district. The business transacted and the work reviewed gave interest to the occasion, eliciting at times warm and sometimes spicy discussion. During the session prominence was given to religious exercises. The gospel was preached in earnestness and with unction from time to time. But the most delightful season was found in the love-feast on Sunday morning, when all our hearts were knit together in love. At the close of the sermon, at eleven o'clock on Sunday, the Lord's Supper was administered to about one hundred and fifty communicants.

We continued the meeting till Friday night, by the efficient help of Bros. L. C. Calhoun, E. Phillips, M. E. Butt and T. C. M. Golland. The congregations were large and attentive. The church was powerfully blessed. Backsliders were reclaimed, sinners were converted and seven valuable members added to the church.

The Sunday following class meeting was held. The attendance was good and the spirit glorious; for the Holy Ghost was present to own and bless.

On Sunday night the young men organized their prayer meeting, with an encouraging attendance and a delightful service. Thus the work of the Lord goes steadily forward upon the Ozark circuit.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PICNIC AT CHINA GROVE, MISS.—Mr. Editor: On the fourth instant the patrons and friends of China Grove church, Pike county, Miss., had a picnic, for the benefit of the Sabbath school at that place. The superintendents of two Sabbath schools were present with their scholars—Bro. D. O. Summer, of China Grove, and Miss Mollie Lampteu, of Tylertown. After a few preliminary remarks and singing the schools adjourned for dinner, which was beautifully spread on a long table previously made for that purpose. After enjoying these luxuries all repaired to the house to attend a spelling match, in which almost everybody participated.

A great many people contributed to the Sabbath school fund. Our able and energetic superintendent is doing a good work in these ends of the earth. May his efforts be crowned with unequaled success, and the young minds he is training in morality stand on the pedestals of glory in future times.

MISS MOLLIE LAMPTON,
Annunciator.
J. M. REGAN, Secretary.

SPARTA, LA.—Mr. Editor: The camp meeting for Sparta circuit commenced on Wednesday, September 1, and closed on Monday morning, the sixth. The Lord was present in convicting and converting power. Accessions, thirty-three. I do not know how many conversions, but there were many. Christians were greatly revived. Bro. Miller, presiding elder, and Bro. Shea, of Minden, were with us; also Bros. Crowson, Love, McCoy and White. The preaching was attended with great power, and better attention and order I never saw at any meeting.

J. W. HEARN.

QUERY AND ANSWER.—We are asked a question of the very first importance in church finance:

"Last year we succeeded, by the assistance of some warm friends of missions, in raising an amount largely above the assessment for missions in our charge. At the fourth Quarterly Conference the stewards decided that they were only bound, and would only pay, the assessment. Now are our stewards right or wrong?"

Answer.—1. Your stewards violated a fundamental maxim of our financial policy—recognized from the very foundation of our church—i. e., that money must be strictly, and in every case, used for the purposes for which it has been given.

2. The name steward implies agent, and no agent in or out of the church can divert funds of a principal to other objects than those intended by the principal, without immorality.

3. Any presiding elder who would knowingly allow such a use of missionary money in a Quarterly Conference ought to be charged with maladministration at the next Annual Conference.

D. C. KELLEY,
Assistant Secretary of Missions.

A STRICKEN COMMUNITY.—The Fever at Powell's Station.—A Cry for Assistance.—Just before going to press yesterday we received and published the following telegram, which we republish, having come to hand yesterday too late for comment:

MILTON, FLA., Sept. 15, 3 P. M.—To J. W. Derr: Reiterate appeal to Commodore Cooper to aid us. All our nurses sick at Powell's Point. Physicians, nurses and medicine immediately wanted.

W. W. POTTEN.

We have other advices that the distress is very great. Nearly the whole community being sick, members of the same family have in most cases dug the graves and performed all the offices of burial, children or parents having died. The needs of these afflicted people are general, comprising a lack not only of the necessaries of life, but of medicine and the attendance required by the sick. The extreme fatality of this fever is illustrated by the fact that four patients were under treatment by one physician and two of them died in three and a half days, and the other two in five days from the inception of the disease.—Pensacola Gazette, Sept. 16.

A LADY who had been teaching her little four-year-old boy the elements of arithmetic was astounded by his running and propounding the problem: "Mamma, if you had three butterflies, and each butterfly had a bug in his ear, how many butterflies would you have?" The mother is still working at the problem.

Resignation of the Sunday School Secretary.

ELECTION OF HIS SUCCESSOR.

At a meeting of the Book Committee at the Publishing House, September 14, 1875, the chairman laid before the committee the following communication:

OXFORD, GA., September 10, 1875.

Rev. R. A. Young, D. D., Chairman of the Book Committee:

DEAR BROTHER—I have to day received a note from Dr. W. H. Morgan, secretary of the Book Committee, dated September 7, embodying the following resolution, adopted by the Book Committee, at a meeting held at the Publishing House in Nashville, August 30:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that Rev. A. G. Haygood, Sunday school secretary, should reside in this city, and should have an office in the Publishing House."

I beg herewith to tender my resignation as Sunday school secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to take effect January 1, 1876, or as soon thereafter as the Bishops (see Journal of the General Conference of 1870) shall appoint my successor.

I am very truly and respectfully your brother,

ATTICUS G. HAYGOOD.

On motion the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, The Rev. A. G. Haygood, D. D., has sent in his resignation as Sunday school secretary, to take effect January 1, 1876; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Book Committee receive, and reluctantly accept, the same. To the eminent ability of Dr. Haygood, and his diligence in labor, we bear hearty testimony; and we believe the whole church will unite with us in this sentiment.

Resolved, That the Book Committee abides in the conviction that the interests of the Sunday school department, and the editing of its periodicals, require the editor to be convenient to the business, and in easy and constant communication with the Publishing House, if not with other connectional interests; and the committee express their profound regret that one who has shown such acknowledged fitness for the various and difficult duties of the Sunday school secretaryship feels constrained, for any cause, to remove his residence and office from Nashville, Tenn., to Oxford, Ga.

Resolved, That according to the direction of the General Conference (Journal of 1874, page 565) a Sunday school secretary be elected to fill the vacancy made by the resignation of Dr. Haygood.

Whereupon the Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D., of the Holston Conference, was unanimously elected, by ballot, as Sunday school secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. W. H. MORGAN, Sec.

SICKNESS, WANT AND DISTRESS.—The Afflicted Settlement at Powell's.—We clip from the Pensacola Gazette of the fifteenth:

In endeavoring to account for the sickness in the unfortunate settlement of Powell's, the theory is advanced that it was aggravated by using fish as a fertilizer in the gardens of the various residents. Such as they could not sell or consume they applied as manure near the surface of the ground. The heaviest mortality was among those whose pursuit was fishing. In some families a majority of the members had died.

Our latest news is from an authentic source, and is under date of the thirteenth. The summary includes one more death than heretofore reported, making seventeen in all, and forty cases. The destitution of the community has been partially relieved, but great want and distress still exist.

Periodicals.

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE for October has: Wanderings with Virgil, Illustrated, The Ocklawaha in May, Illustrated, Tentoretto's Last Picture, Spiritualism and Jurisprudence, The Winds, In the Pine Land, The Truth About Madame Rattazzi, A Day in Chiua Town, The Largest Retail Store in the World, The Ben Marche, and other articles.

THE SOUTHERN MUSICAL JOURNAL is the title of an excellent monthly published at Savannah, Ga., by Ludden & Bates. Price, $1.25 per annum. We have received numbers for August and September.

PETERSON'S LADIES' NATIONAL MAGAZINE for October has been received. It abounds in patterns, fashion plates and light literature.

WE HAVE received from the Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn., the General Minutes for 1874. Every preacher will want a copy, of course.

THE SOUTHERN EVANGELIST is the title of a new journal published at Spartanburg, S. C., by the Southern Tract Association.

WE DO and avoid much merely to satisfy the imagination. A thousand things insignificant in themselves please or offend by what they suggest.

Field Notes.

MR. EDITOR: I spent six pleasant days on Bro. C.'s work, looking around and taking notes. I find he has the work "well in hand." He watches over the flock "as one that must give account." While there has been no great stir, there has been gradual advancement. The talks in the love-feast were delightful to hear. One sister, by the relation of her experience, set the seal of truth to the morning sermon, and so the preacher was encouraged.

A brief visit to Bro. R., at the close of a protracted meeting, disclosed a church in fine working order. Faith has been strengthened and love deepened. One adult and two infants baptized, and seven received into the church. The fall campaign has been fairly inaugurated, and we listen to hear of victories from every circuit, for the brethren are in real, good earnest.

The travel through our district is very much hindered by water. This going by rail where the water is, in some places, three feet deep on the track, is not very delightful. If Saxe could take the trip some of our preachers take he would not sing so joyously:

"Ilness me! this is pleasant, Riding on a rail."

The "hardness of the times" is bringing into the minds of some of the brethren some queer thoughts. The suggestion of Bishop Marvin, made in 1865, in regard to unmarried preachers, is being revived and much talked over. The conclusion is that in view of the "present distress" the young preachers remain unmarried. Whether they will agree to that conclusion remains to be seen. One thing is a fact—the majority of the circuits desire single men for their pastors.

I have found two brethren very much troubled in mind. They say that the great Dr. Bledsoe has delivered the Methodist Church over to Calvinism—that he has surrendered "horse, foot and dragoons." I know not. I have not read his article, but I imagine that Dr. Bledsoe is only one of six hundred and ninety-six thousand. Those brethren can simply apply the "rule of three" and see the result. I had no idea that presiding elders heard so many curious things. One brother speaks of attending a camp meeting that actually was mounted on stilts. Another suggests that everybody knows that Bro. Daves is au fait in Spanish, because there are so many snatches of it in his very interesting letters; but it would be well for him to send us along a translation, as very few home folks can understand it, and this having to jump for a lexicon in the midst of a letter is a tax upon patience. And "many other such like things" have been heard. Our camp meeting at D. begins the day after to-morrow. I hope to send you a good report.

PRESIDING ELDER.

WE COPY the following from the Western Methodist. We share deeply the regret at the accident that has befallen Bro. Evans, and also in the hope that he may be speedily restored.

We learn with deep regret that the Rev. Charles F. Evans, of the Little Rock Conference, and pastor at Arkadelphia, met with a very painful accident September 4. The Southern Standard says: "He started in the morning with his family, in a hack, intending to be present at the camp meeting at Rock Creek church, about seventeen miles from Arkadelphia. When near the plantation of Mr. James Strong, about nine miles from town, by some mishap Mr. Evans was thrown from the vehicle, and, becoming entangled in the wheel, his left leg was broken below the knee-joint. A messenger was dispatched, and Dr. J. R. Dale immediately started to render all necessary assistance. Mr. Evans was conveyed to Mr. Strong's residence, where he receives all possible attention." Bro. Evans, we hope, will soon recover from the effects of this accident. We notice that he is announced as president of the Arkadelphia Female Institute.

REVIVAL OF THE FEVER AT PASCAGOULA.—The Star of the eleventh reports:

"During last week, and after our editorial upon the subject of quarantine was written, the yellow fever again broke out in our midst with increased violence. We have now sixty cases that the physicians report."

AN Irish peer, traveling in France with a negro servant, directed him, if questioned on the subject, always to say that his master was a Frenchman. The man was punctiliously faithful to his orders; but whenever he said, "My massa am a Frenchman," he always added, "and so am I."

THE RIFT WITHIN THE LUTE.

MR. EDITOR: The following poem was a favorite selection of Mrs. Lucy H. McVea, who, at San Antonio, Texas, August 12, 1875, passed quietly to "the rest which remaineth for the people of God." It calmed the waning hours of her lingering illness, and its publication may bring like comfort to some other "long-suffering" one.

As one who walketh through Death's solemn vale
In the full knowledge that his trembling steps
Do lead him from the paths of earthly life,
So I walk wearily, yet all the while
I labor with my hands, as months, nay, days,
Were not the little all of life to me.
I dwell among my kindred smilingly,
Yet in my secret soul I feel, yea, know,
That seeds of death are springing up so fast—
"A little folding of the hands to sleep"
May measure out my days. My work begun
May never know completion, and my hope
Have never shaping of reality.

Golden fair the autumn stretched before me;
Its wealth of fruit poured out around my feet
With such full lavishness. Its shining skies
Did smile so bright above me that no thought
Of shortened date found room whereon to fling
Its dusky shadow. All my hopes looked out
On fullness of all days and length of years,
Wherein the dreamings of my youth and prime
Should turn from fancies into shape and form;
And now?
What matter? All our lives are shaped
By One who knoweth well what end shall be
The crowning of each life, or cross or crown;
And in the years to come our little work
We think unfinished, and all incomplete,
May shape hereafter an eternal crown.
What matter, then, if Death's cold hand cut short
Our life in very midst, as flowers that fall
When frost doth touch their bloom? Is not God just?
Doth he not know when our poor failing hands
Have done the work he gave them? When our souls
Are ready for the summons to the home
He hath prepared of old for his beloved?
In trust that, faltering, shall not fail—
In hope that shineth over darkest sea—
In faith that, steadfast, seeth, far beyond,
The King in all his glory—do I wait
The Silent Angel, as he bringeth me
Through silence to the land so far away.
I know my feet are stumbling in the dark—
That hands grow weary ere the day is done;
I feel the presence of the summoner;
And yet I cling to life! So fair, so sweet,
Yet fleeting from me as the light that dies
From yon soft sunset scene.
God knoweth best!
Whatever come, or length of days or death,
His will be done.

OBITUARIES.

MRS. AGNES ARCHER BLUNT, whose maiden name was Downman, was born in Petersburg, Va., A. D. 1787, and died at Spring Hill, Marengo county, Ala., on the ninth of August, 1875, in the eighty-eighth year of her age.

She married at the age of nineteen, and became the mother of twelve children. Her husband, Thomas Blunt, having died a few months before the birth of her youngest child, the burden of a large family was left upon her hands. As to her faithfulness and success in rearing her charge, a noble and useful posterity remain a living monument—a posterity of which she was justly proud—who, tried in every relation and vicissitude of life, in prosperity and in adversity, in war and in peace, have ever reflected the worth and superiority of their excellent ancestor. She lived to see many of these pass from this "stage of action." Of her twelve children only four survive her—one son and three daughters; but many of the third and fourth generation remain to perpetuate the influence of her grand life and character. The youngest of her children, now a saint in heaven, was for ten years a companion of the writer, and never was man blessed with a more precious helpmate. This relationship gave him an opportunity of becoming a fit witness to the noble character and traits of his mother-in-law. It was his privilege to be with her during the last three years of her life, and with profound admiration to behold in her one of the brightest examples of fortitude, patience, resignation and meekness that ever adorned the Christian profession. Though reduced to poverty and want by late disasters—to extreme feebleness, suffering and total blindness by old age—yet she was never heard to utter one word of complaint, only when she complained of herself that "she was of no account—not able to do anything."

She was a woman of strong constitution naturally, of indomitable energy and untiring industry, and her mind retained its vigor even up to the comatose state into which she relapsed a few days before her death. She was remarkably exempt from the mental imbecility, childishness and fretfulness common to old age. Naturally taciturn, she was never known to utter a word of folly, or to speak evil of any one. Having perfect control of "the unruly member," she "kept her tongue from evil and her lips from speaking guile." All who knew her loved and honored her.

Mothers with large families may derive a good lesson from this noble subject. Neglecting no duty at home, she found but little time to go abroad or intermeddle in public affairs. The fruits declare the wisdom of her course. The Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she was a member, is supplied from her posterity with leaders, stewards, one able minister of the Alabama Conference, and other faithful members, and the Baptist Church with several pious and efficient members. How it stirs the soul to contemplate the virtues of this noble woman!—to think how unselfish she was; how she would forget herself in her deep concern for others; how, in her extreme feebleness and pain, and total blindness, she would grope her way to the room of the sick to inquire after and speak words of sympathy to them, when at the same time she was the greater sufferer; how she suppressed and concealed her sufferings, lest she might add trouble to the anxious heart of her faithful and doting daughter, waiting around her bedside day and night. Precious mother! Great is our loss! But, blessed be God, thy gain is infinitely greater. And we would not be so selfish as to have thee back in this world of sorrow. No, not for one moment would we rob thee of thy bright reward! "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them." "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." H. B. COTTRELL.

DIED, in Talbot county, Ga., June 19, 1875, Mrs. ELIZABETH ELLISON, widow of John Ellison. She was born in Londonderry, Ireland, August 13, 1793. Her parents removed, when she was young, to this country, and settled in Chester, S. C. She was raised a Presbyterian, but after her marriage joined the Methodist Church, of which she was a most pious and devoted member for more than fifty years. Having been cared for by her from early boyhood with all a mother's love and tender sympathy, and having enjoyed the daily and intimate association of the home circle for many years, I can fully appreciate her deep piety and earnest devotion to all that was true, lovely and pure. The characteristics of the virtuous woman described by Solomon were developed in her life, for by her industry, economy and faithful discharge of household duties she raised a large family of children, who may well rise up and call her blessed, for by the gentle, pious and loving influence she exerted over them they were all trained up for usefulness and respectability, and have all become members of the church of Christ. She combined the best elements of female character, rendered more lovely by the graces of the Holy Ghost, whose fruits clustered in her heart and were illustrated in her daily walk and conversation. She was the most earnest and devoted Christian I ever knew. It was her habit for many years to rise early, frequently before daylight, and prepare herself for the duties and trials of the day by prayer and reading the Holy Scriptures, and other religious books that might direct, strengthen and comfort her. In a letter written to me by one of her sons, who cared for her in her old age, and ministered to her with all the tenderness of a woman and all the devotion of a true man, he says:

"I do not think you can have any idea of the religious reading she did during the past two years. She was familiar with all the good old books that came in her reach. She read nothing else. For thirty years she has used Jay's Exercises, wearing out three or four copies, that are carefully stitched together, wrapped up in paper and put away in the book-case. Some weeks before our mother's death, on Sunday morning I took Baker's Sermons—a book she had been reading—to her bed, and asked which one I should read to her. She said: 'David's dying charge to his son Solomon—"Know thou the God of thy father,"' etc. She was thinking more of me than of herself."

Religion appeared to permeate her whole heart and life. She enjoyed its hopes, relied on its promises and discharged its duties, realizing in her daily experience its light, its strength, its comfort and its purity. The most prominent traits exhibited in her life were faith, humility, meekness, heavenly-mindedness and devotion. Many hours were daily spent in prayer. In the wide range of many years' observation I have never known a more perfect Christian character. About a month before she died she fainted. When she rallied she said that if it had been the Lord's will to have taken her then, she felt that she would have gone straight to the heaven of heavens. Her last hours were calm and peaceful. She fell asleep in the arms of Jesus. The spiritual life, which had germinated in her heart fifty years before, had grown into such large proportions as to burst the mortal body that enfolded it, and developed into the full proportions of immortality and heaven. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

ONE WHO KNEW AND LOVED HER.

THE subject of this sketch, Mrs. FRANCES N. P. GUY, was born February 1, 1839, in Clarke county, Ala.; was married March 23, 1864; joined the Baptist Church November 17, 1873; united by letter with the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at this place, July 25, 1874, and remained a consistent member of the same up to the time of her death, which occurred on the evening of August 12, 1875, in this place, at fifteen minutes before six o'clock.

Surely death was a happy change to Sister Guy, for indeed she was a great sufferer here. It seemed that God designed to polish her in the fires of deep affliction, and thus make her a bright jewel for heaven, for she was called to suffer long and much, being confined to her bed, the major part of the time, for two long years previous to her death, and entirely so during the last six months of her life. Her afflictions were borne with much Christian fortitude. She often expressed herself to the writer, when on his pastoral visits to her, as being perfectly resigned to the will of God in the matter of suffering, and also of dying.

As she had been looking for the messenger for some time, he did not take her by surprise at his coming, but found her at her post, with oil in her lamp, ready, willing and waiting to obey the summons. Nothing caused the least desire in her heart to cling to the couch of suffering any longer save the golden chain of affection that bound her to her husband and children, and especially to the precious babe of her bosom. A few days before her death, knowing that she had soon to give them up, she called her loved ones around her bed; told them she was going away, delivered to them her dying message, and had them promise to meet her in heaven.

A few minutes before she breathed her last she raised her icy hands, folded them quietly across her dying breast, and passed away from this dark world of suffering to the sunlit climes of glory; not, however, in great ecstasy, shouting and praising God aloud, but rather as mildly and as gently as the golden rays of the glorious sun on that calm, beautiful summer evening.

Sister Guy died at the conclusion of a prayer meeting of her own appointment. "Let music charm me last on earth, and greet me first in heaven."

She leaves a husband and three little children to mourn her loss. May God help them to follow the wife and mother to the bright home of the pure and good.

RICHARD F. CROWSON, son of the Rev. R. T. and Mrs. Rebecca Crowson, was born in Shelby county Ala., September 4, 1853, and died at the residence of his father, in Winston county, Miss., August 13, 1875.

The subject of this obituary was in childhood remarkably obedient to parents, and kind and loving to his brothers and sisters. Blessed with religious parents, he received pious instruction in early life, and at the age of fifteen years professed faith in Christ, joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he lived endeavoring to adorn the profession he had made by a pious walk and a godly conversation until his death. Richard was highly esteemed by all. This was evident from the faithfulness of his many friends during his illness. His disease was consumption. He was confined to his bed eight months, but his young associates watched over and nursed him the last night he spent on earth with as much anxiety as during the first hours of his sickness.

The writer was his pastor two years, and can truly say he never saw the Christian life more beautifully exemplified by one so young. We had fondly anticipated much from him for the church and his fellow-man; but God knew best, and called him away in the bloom of his young manhood. During his illness he spoke frequently of his departure with that calmness that can characterize none but those who enjoy the religion of Christ. He was asked by his father, some time before his death, if he had any hope of getting well. He said he sometimes hoped he might recover, but if he did not he was ready and perfectly resigned to the will of the Lord. Not many days before his death he called his sister to his bedside and said: "Sister, you must not weep for me when I am gone." The reply was: "We cannot refrain from shedding tears when you are gone, my brother." "Oh," he said, "I shall be so much better off in heaven, where there is no more pain." He went not out in a storm of rejoicing; but as a summer's sun sinks calmly to rest in a cloudless sky, so ebbed his life away, and his redeemed soul took its flight to the God whom he loved so well. We all mourn the untimely death of this noble young man. A. W. LANGLEY.

DIED, on the first of August, 1875, Sister SARAH J. THORNTON, wife of Dr. J. J. Thornton, of Centerville, Newton county, Miss. Sister Thornton was born in Autauga county, Ala., May 15, 1840. She was the daughter of Edward Lea and Margaret F. Buyck, who taught their children to love God, and their daughter followed their precepts and examples. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in her twelfth year, and lived an exemplary Christian life up to the day of her death. She was married to Dr. Thornton in her fourteenth year. She lived one year after their marriage in Alabama; then moved to Scott county, Miss., and lived there one year; thence to Newton county, Miss., and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Centerville. The church mourns her loss, but their loss is her eternal gain. She was loved by all who knew her, and long will the memory of her bright Christian example linger with her many friends. The end of such a life as Sister Thornton's could not but be victorious and triumphant. She was fully prepared for death. Her disease was consumption. She lingered long, but bore all her sufferings with Christian patience and without a single murmur. She asked her physicians their opinion, and told them not to be afraid to tell her—that it would not alarm her. She knew her end on earth was near, but said she was prepared, and only regretted parting with her loved ones. Her loss to the society in which she lived, and to all who knew her, is keenly felt, but to no one so much as her dear children and bereaved husband, and the preachers, who were always welcome to her hospitality. She died in great peace. The funeral services, which took place at the grave, were attended by the largest concourse of people I have ever seen follow a corpse to its last resting-place on earth. Her pastor, J. A. V.

FRANCES ELIZA LOCKE, wife of Joseph Locke, and daughter of John and Drucilla Sampey, was born in Conecuh county, Ala., July 23, 1829, and died in the same county, July 7, 1875. Having had the religious influences of a Christian home thrown around her in infancy and childhood, she connected herself with the Methodist Church at the very early age of eight years, and was happily converted to God in her sixteenth year. From that hour her life was in strict accordance with the commands of God, and, as she herself frequently remarked, she always had a consciousness of her acceptance with the God she loved. She was always in sympathy with the church of her choice, whose communion she so much loved. Whatever affected it sensibly affected her.

Her disease was of a very severe and painful character indeed. She suffered for several months before her departure, but in all she recognized the hand of God, and felt that it was for his glory and her good that she suffered. As her pastor I visited her often during her illness, and always found her resigned and happy in the anticipations of a rich reward. In all her suffering she evinced a Christian fortitude seldom if ever excelled.

As a daughter she was obedient, gentle and kind; as a wife, sympathizing and affectionate, and as a mother she combined the characteristics of a true Christian woman. It was in this relation that her character shone most beautifully—always endeavoring to impress the truths of Christianity upon the loved ones at home. Her influence exerted in these sacred precincts was of such a hallowed nature that even now they point to ma as the best Christian they ever knew. Truly her "labor was not in vain in the Lord."

JAS. S. RENCHER.

MRS. HARRIET E. SHEEHE, daughter of Capt. James and Maria Brice, was born in Arcadia, Bienville parish, La., January 9, 1858; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South and was converted under the preaching of Rev. J. H. Jordan in 1871; was married to Mr. D. R. Sheehe May 11, 1875, and died, after an illness of twenty-four hours, in Arcadia, La., August 14, 1875.

Sister Sheehe was richly endowed in person, mind and heart, having received the social and educational advantages which devoted parents with liberal means could bestow. Added to these were those graces of high moral culture which religion alone imparts, and consequently she was the object of more than usual affection from family, relatives and friends. It was in the sacred precincts of home that her beautiful character shone with greater brilliancy than elsewhere. Toward her parents she was obedient, loving, tender. To her friends she was true, and ever ready to make personal sacrifices to minister to their comfort and happiness. For her husband she cherished the most profound love, making his home attractive by her gentle ways and lovely smiles. As a Christian her life was above reproach, walking in all the commandments of the Lord blameless. She had made great preparation to entertain her friends during a protracted meeting to commence in Arcadia the day she died; but, alas! instead of the bell calling God's people to the services of his house, it was the funeral dirge, and the call of the Master for her to join the anthems of the skies, where congregations never break up. As she had lived, so she died, leaving the world with the victor's shout quivering upon her pale lips, and leaving her weeping friends with the blessed assurance of her reception beyond the flood. J. W. HEARN.

I AM called as a pastor to record the removal of one of my flock from the fold below to the fold above. Bro. LEVEN H. HITCH was born in Somerset county, Md., of pious Methodist parents. In his thirteenth year he was born again, and connected himself with the Methodist Protestant Church. Ten years ago he came to this city. The Methodist churches here had been seized by the military, and were used by the ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North.) Bro. Hitch, not approving of such carnal proceedings, attended the ministry and worship of the Presbyterian and Baptist Churches. On the dispossession of the Methodist Episcopal Church (North,) and the restoration of our churches by President Johnson, Bro. Hitch presented himself for membership at the Felicity Street church, and was received by Dr. Parker, the pastor. Bro. Hitch expressed himself as feeling spiritually at home again.

Bro. Hitch was a modest and unobtrusive Christian man, loving mercy, doing justly and walking humbly with God—of amiable disposition, and warm in his attachments. He met his earthly end in peace, trusting only in a Savior's merit, but trusting wholly in that merit. His loved ones deplore his loss, but rejoice in hope of meeting again in the heaven above—the heaven of love. He died August 22, 1875, aged thirty-four years.

His pastor, J. B. WALKER.

DIED, at his residence near Stanton, Tenn., February 13, 1875, Bro. HENRY B. WARE. He was born in Richmond county, Ga., in the year 1807. The writer first made his acquaintance in Wilcox county, Ala. From Wilcox he moved to Marengo county, Ala., where he lived till after the close of the war.

As a member of the Methodist Church for many years, he was consistent in his life, orderly in his walk, godly in his conversation. He was retiring in his habits, reserved in his manners, yet unflinching in his devotion to the church of his choice. With his means he was liberal in his contributions to the church and the poor. His princely hospitality was dispensed with a liberal hand to his friends, among whom it was his delight to number and honor the ministers of Christ. They were ever greeted with a cordial welcome, and made comfortable and happy at his home, and by them his memory is cherished with grateful remembrances. He was noble in his nature, refined in his sensibilities, and generous in his impulses.

His end was peaceful, tranquil, triumphant. It was not surprising to hear that he died right. His life was such as to warrant the belief. May God bless and save his surviving friends. G. F. E.

DIED, at Brown's Well, in Copiah county, Miss., April 19, 1875, of chronic diarrhea, WILLIAM H. ALLEN, of Hinds county, Miss.

The deceased was a native of South Carolina; moved with his parents, at an early age, to Wilkinson county, Miss.; thence to Hinds county, Miss., where he was married, in 1852, to Miss Lydia B. Campbell, daughter of Dr. J. H. Campbell, of Utica, Miss. The deceased was in the fifty-eighth year of his age at the time of his death. He had been for several years an active, consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, filling the office of steward in the church for a part of the time. Bro. Allen was an exemplary man in all the relations of life—modest and retiring, teaching others more by example than otherwise. His health had been bad for several years. He had been a constant but patient sufferer for months before his death, and finally met death with calm and peaceful resignation. His family had all preceded him to the spirit world. We have no doubt our loss is his eternal gain.

H. J. HARRIS.

THEOPHILUS MAXEY JOHNSON died at his home in Franklin, La., on the twenty-first of August, 1875. He was born in the State of Illinois, January 25, 1815. His parents were strict Methodists, and his father was considered a very exemplary Christian. Three brothers are now preachers in the Northern Methodist Church. It was but natural that Bro. Johnson should connect himself with the church of his family early in life. For much the larger portion of his life he has been a consistent worshiper at the altar of the Methodist Church. He came south about twenty-five years ago, his home most of the time since being in Franklin. He died of a lingering sickness, his health steadily declining for the two last years. I visited him frequently during the last few months of his sickness. He gave me many assurances of his trust in God. Toward the last I think his mind became too defective for him to realize fully his condition. But his family is not without hope that he died in peace. J. W. MEDLOCK.

W. W. HINSON was born in Hancock county, Ga., in 1818; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in Choctaw county, Ala., about the year 1856, under the ministry of Gabriel Hawkins, and died in Clarke county, Miss., January 17, 1875. Bro. Hinson was one of many that came into the fold of the great Shepherd about this time. He was an humble, quiet, unassuming man, peaceable in his neighborhood. Humility was most conspicuous in his character. When he went to the house of God you would find him in the "inner corner," with his attention closely fixed on the preacher, intent on gathering all that fell from the lips of the man of God about the Father and heaven and eternal life, and how to reach the heavenly rest. Bro. Hinson, like a great many others, was sometimes in a backslidden state, but he seemed to be reclaimed before he died, for he said he was willing to go, and sent a message to his son in Texas to meet him in heaven, and told his children at home to meet him in the home of the blessed. H. S. GILMORE.

DIED, at her residence in Gregg county, Texas, September 5, 1875, Mrs. MALINDA CLIFTON, daughter of John and Nancy White, and wife of Rev. J. O. Clifton. She was born in North Carolina; moved, while very young, to Georgia, and after some years to Coosa county, Ala., where she was married to J. O. Clifton. She was converted to God in the autumn of 1848, at a camp meeting in Coosa county, Ala., and joined the M. E. Church. She leaves six children; two have preceded her to the glory land. Her walk was orderly and her conversation of Christ. When she was informed by her physician that she must die she stated that she had rather raise the children, but if it was the will of God all was well. The writer has seen many pass away, but never before saw such a triumph.

B. W. BROWN.

THE following preamble and resolutions were passed by the Sabbath school of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Ocean Springs, August 29, 1875:

Whereas, It has pleased the great Head of the church to remove from earth to heaven Miss EVELENA CLARK, just merging into lovely womanhood; therefore,

Resolved, That Ocean Springs Sabbath school has lost an attentive, improving and beloved member of the Bible class, the church a devoted member, her parents a beloved child, her sisters an affectionate sister; that we deplore her death, yet believe that our loss is her eternal gain, and that we bow with humble resignation to the will of God.

Resolved, That we will wear a badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, and to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

M. S. PARK, Supt.

ELIZABETH J. CHENAULT was born October 13, 1843; married to Wilford J. Compton November 24, 1865; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in August, 1873, and died July 16, 1875.

During her last illness she assured her husband that she was prepared for a change of worlds, which event she saw near at hand. On the Sunday previous to her death she was in good health, and before a large congregation, in company with her husband, she witnessed a good profession by presenting her little children, Florence and Kate, for baptism. May the Good Shepherd gather these tender lambs in his arms, and in his own good time bring them to meet their mother on the shining shore.

LEVEY MILLER, son of William and Nancy E. Harp, died at their residence in Dayton, Sebastian county, Ark., on the twenty-first of August, A. D. 1875, aged eight months and thirteen days.

FOR many reasons it is better to burn letters than to hoard them in this most uncertain world. Burn if you would not have the deepest secrets of your soul made the sport of attorneys. Burn if you would not have your friend pained by even an accidental disclosure of kindness. Burn if you would have your costliest secrets continue undivulged. Burn for your own sake, and for the sake of others.

OVERWHELMED.

Thorny the path I tread;
Storm-clouds above my head;
Heavy the weight I bear;
Crushing my load of care.
Jesus, bend down to me!
Let me thy dear face see!

Fainting my weary heart,
Aching with bitter smart,
Failing my faith so small
That the dear Lord knows all.
Jesus, bend down to me!
Let me thy dear face see!

Shine thou into my soul!
Say to the sick: "Be whole!"
Hear thou my sobbing plaint;
Strengthen my trust, so faint.
Jesus, bend down to me!
Let me thy dear face see!

Jesus! sweet Lamb of God!
Though by all heaven adored,
Well dost thou know the strife
Of this sad, mortal life.
Jesus, bend down to me!
Let me thy dear face see!

North and South.—A Prophetic View.

BY THE LATE BISHOP CAPERS.

The very remarkable letter, says the Methodist, written by the late Bishop Capers in 1854, and first printed by us this week, on our first page, comes to us from the hands of Dr. Charles F. Deems, pastor of the Church of the Strangers, in this city. To authenticate this wonderful document we add the letter of C. B. DuPre, Esq.:

CLINTON, S. C., Aug. 16, 1875.

REV. C. F. DEEMS—Dear Sir: In 1854 the writer, then comparatively a young man about entering life, wrote, at the suggestion of his friends, to the lamented Bishop Capers, asking his advice and opinion as to matters of a public character which at that time were occupying the minds of our leading public men. His answer, I frankly confess to you, was so much in conflict with the pervading spirit of the populace that I could not fully appreciate it, and laid it away among my papers as a one-sided view of Church and State affairs. Recently, in overlooking my papers, I came across the letter, which I now regard, in the light of experiences sad and bitter, as one of the most remarkable papers I have ever read. It is needless for me to say to you that I prize it above all other communications in my possession, and intend it as a legacy for my son.

Thinking that the deep spirit of true Christian piety which pervades this letter, and the utterances of one who was so much beloved by those who knew him, may be of service in these days, I send you herewith a copy of the letter, asking that it be published in the New York Methodist or other church paper. It seems now to me that the great and good Bishop must have been more than humanly inspired to have taken so clear and prophetic a view of the then future. C. B. DUPRE.

ANDERSON, S. C., Feb. 25, 1854.

C. B. DUPRE, ESQ.—My Dear Brother: Upon my return home yesterday from an extended tour of official duty I find your letter of January 9, which is now open before me. You now understand why you have not been answered sooner.

The subject matter of your letter requires careful consideration, and no mere ad captandum response. Were the subject just opened to my mind I would not attempt to give you a reply without careful deliberation. You are right in supposing that these matters have been resting heavily upon my mind and heart for the past twenty years. God alone knows how anxiously I have revolved them, and the real suffering I have endured in consequence of evil forbodings which, in spite of my resolution, take possession of my spirit.

In order that I may properly answer you, let me see if the following questions will not embrace the subject matter of your letter—at any rate, the gist of it:

First. You ask: Do I consider the existence of the institution of slavery as the one great impediment in the way of a cordial union of the two branches of the Methodist Church in the United States?

Second. Do I consider the institution of slavery so well established and so necessary a feature of the economy of the Southern States as to warrant the conclusion that it is, and will remain, a permanent feature of our civilization?

These are indeed grave subjects for reflection, and call for the exercise of a degree of philosophic penetration which I fear is not sufficiently mine to convince one, even if I had the leisure and you the patience to follow me in an extended argument. This cannot be for many reasons, but for none more appreciable just now than the fact that I am just home after an absence of many weeks, and your letter, my dear friend, is only one of several which claim my consideration. My answers to the questions above must, therefore, be as devoid of argument as possible.

To the first I answer that I do consider the institution of slavery, as recognized in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as the chief, the great central difficulty in the way of a cordial fraternal relation between the two great branches of Methodism in the United States. There may be other obstacles in the way, but I regard them as mere collateral issues, springing altogether from the want of agreement upon some compromise of this slavery question such as some of us, North and South, endeavored to make in the General Conference of 1844.

Slavery out of the way, there would remain no real, sensible cause of separation between the two churches as organizations, but they would in time come together by a law of moral affinity, and unite hands and hearts in the great work which God in his providence designed the Methodist Church to accomplish in America. I can understand and do fully appreciate, as you evidently do not, the conscientious scruples of our Northern brethren upon this slavery question. I knew before the division of the church, and yet am honored with the friendship of, as good and as pure Christian ministers among them as are to be found in any church organization—men who are actuated by the clearest convictions of their consciences in regarding the institution of slavery as a grievous sin.

My dear Charles, when we desire to discover the real truth of any matter, especially of such as we are directly interested in, we must first place our minds in a negative state. This will require a long time with some temperaments. We must not look at a subject we are disposed to prejudge through a contracted pupil. We must discern, if we do, that there is a defect in our vision or in the position we occupy which is likely to make an object appear white when in reality it is black.

I would to God this division wall between the Church North and South was broken down, and we could be united as formerly in the glorious work of our Master, for which our church economy is so well adapted in meeting the tastes and genius of the mass of our American citizens. You may rest assured of one thing: If the Master sees that his work is hindered by this estrangement of his laborers, he will remove the cause in his own good way and time.

I am not of those boasting spirits who are ready to condemn all others, and yet can see no fault in themselves; hence I do not regard the stuff you hear of from so-called theorists, who declare that there is an irreconcilable hostility between the Puritan and the descendants of the English gentry and the French Huguenots. All this, to one who has traveled as often as I have, from local prejudices is the veriest nonsense. Yea, and wicked vanity. Bring the Puritan, the English gentry and the Huguenot under the influence of the grace of God, and the devil whispers no more of such folly.

I pass to your second question. I do not consider the institution of slavery, or any other institution of mere human origin, so necessary a feature of social life as to challenge the providences of God. But suppose I take a more worldly view of your inquiry.

I am, and have been for some time, assured in my mind that the mission of African slavery has been accomplished in America, and that the institution in the United States will soon cease to exist. I form my conclusion from the progress of events in the civilized world, and the wonderful developments of Christianity within this century. The politico-economic view of this question has been well taken by Mr. Fox in the exhaustive debate upon the question of emancipation before the British Parliament. No unprejudiced mind can follow that debate and fail to recognize the finger of God indicating to man his duty, and urging him to act in direct opposition to his personal interests. An institution so long grafted upon the body politic of a nation, such as Great Britain, could have been overthrown in no other way than by the mysterious workings of Providence.

It is simply ridiculous to charge the New England Abolitionists with having originated the idea of negro slavery, and with having inaugurated the agitation of emancipation. Certainly no educated person would so charge, unless he was appealing to human passion upon the instincts. African slavery originated in man's natural cupidity, and was an institution of Great Britain's before there was a New England known in America. Emancipation came first to be discussed in England as an advanced idea of Christian civilization, and can be distinctly traced to the most evangelical of the Christian church in England. Such, at any rate, is my view of this whole matter, in this my sixty-fourth year, after having examined the question in every way it presented itself to my mind. So far, then, from regarding the institution as permanent, I do not recognize the first feature of genuine vitality in it. How it is to transpire, whether by a gradual system of emancipation, fixed in our organic law by amendments, or whether in the storm of revolution, I know not; but as sure as I am now writing to you, my dear brother, the institution of slavery in these United States is doomed. I do not think that any candid student of history, or any unbiased observer of events as they are now transpiring, can resist this conclusion.

Why, man alive, there is now abroad in our land the very spirit which, if encouraged, will lead to the overthrow of the institution in the wreck and the awful ruin of revolution. My opportunity for observation in the South and West for the past ten years assures me that unless our madcap politicians adopt some more conciliatory position, and compromise their extreme partisan views, the two great parties of principles, fixed in State economy, will be lost in sectional bitterness, and an early presidential election secure the triumph of the Abolition party. This will bring about secession on the part of those States who are unwilling to compromise the pride of abstract rights; and then—I shudder at the thought—a bloody revolution, accompanied by the material ruin of the South. Slavery, if this comes to pass, will be abolished by the decree of a military tribunal, and the pride of my people fearfully humbled before God.

This is an awful picture for me even to suggest, but, as I contemplate it, my soul sickens within me. Repel it as I may—banish it from my mind as a mere fancy—yet it grows upon me as a hideous reality, which may a merciful God spare me the pain of realizing.

Since the death of Mr. Calhoun there seems not to be a statesman left in the South of sufficient power to control the storm which his States right theory has provoked. The public men seem to me to be either the satellites of opinions, or mere local luminaries, reflecting the wild and weird light of passion. No one seems disposed to compromise any opinion, prejudice or fancy, because all are wild with this doctrine of rights. Well, an individual may exercise the right of self-destruction, unless his friends or the magistrates question this right, and assure him that there are no absolute and unqualified rights which can be unselfishly exercised.

I am much pleased with the course of the Hon. William W. Boyce, the member in Congress from your district. There is a calmness and philosophic cast about his speeches which is indeed refreshing. God of mercy, grant us more of such men. But why, pray, be troubled? There is One "more glorious and excellent than the mountains of prey," the Lord our God, whose mercy endureth forever. Whatever may come to pass, let us consider it as the Lord's providence, recognize it as such, and praise his holy name, whether we abide in afflictions or are blessed with prosperity.

And now, my dear Charles, I must ask your indulgence for a letter not more extended. I write to you in the candor of one who is your friend, as he was your father's; and my opinions, let them be what they may, are given you in the sincerity with which I would address my own son. You are about embarking in public life, and I consider it a good sign to find you so candid in seeking the advice of those who are more experienced in life. Oh! how I long to see our young men discharging the duties of citizenship, to the whole country, in the spirit of a broad and liberal patriotism, remote from the mere influence of partisan prejudice or personal gain. * * * *

May God bless you and prosper you. Commit your ways fully to him, and he will direct your judgment.

Remember me affectionately to all the family.

Very truly yours,

W. CAPERS.

The Oldest Japanese Industry.

From a consular report in Japan an interesting account of one of the oldest industries of that inventive people is shown. According to the native chronicles, the art of lacquering was discovered in the year 724 A. D. By the end of the thirteenth century it had attained such perfection that a distinguished member of the craft then started a particular school of painting lacquer. The material used in the work consists in the sap of the Urushi tree, a plant cultivated partly for its sap and partly for the fruit, from which a vegetable wax is obtained. These trees obtain their prime of life in the short space of five or six years, when the sap is drawn from them by an elaborate process, requiring great judgment and experience, and in which the inhabitants of a particular district are celebrated for possessing a special skill. After the sap has been fully extracted during the four or five autumnal months the tree is condemned and cut down. But its usefulness does not then cease, for its wood is so light, and at the same time durable, as to be used generally for making floats for fishing-nets, and for many other purposes. As for the process of lacquer painting, it is rather elaborate, but it consists in mainly applying successive layers of varnish, gold powder and paint, followed again by varnish, and lastly rubbed successively with a particular kind of charcoal, polishing powder and horn dust. The manipulation of all these various ingredients and appliances may well be believed to be a delicate matter, requiring manual skill and neatness, as well as good taste. It would make a pretty amusement for some of those ingenious ladies whose talents are now devoted to the preparation of less elaborate ornaments, and who are on the look-out for a new sphere of decorative art.

HABITS.—It is a question worth a moment's thought: "Is any bad habit corrected after a person is twenty years old?"

If we answer the question in the negative—and I am strongly inclined to take that side—the duty of parents and teachers is invested at once with tremendous responsibility. It may also be a warning, and so an aid to the young, who need all the help they can have to become better and wiser.

You meet a man after a separation of a score of years. The same habits mark him now that were his before. The child is so truly the father of the man that the man of sixty has the ways that made him notable when a boy. He carries his head just as he did, is stooping or straight, quick or slow, talks through his nose or not, pronounces words wrong just as he did when a young man, and repeats himself all the days of his life.

There are two reasons why bad habits are rarely if ever changed by men or women of ripe years: 1. After the habit has become confirmed the person loses all consciousness of it, just as the perfection of health is to be unconscious of having a stomach. 2. One's self-esteem is wounded by criticism, and a habit is cherished all the more fondly because assailed. It has been said—it is very nearly true—that no mortal is willing to be criticised, found fault with, and this makes criticism an ungracious and ungrateful task.—New York Observer.

SOME somnambulists have been able to walk on places where, had they been awake, they never would have been able to endure the dizzy height; and I see some Christians, if indeed they be Christians, running awful risks, which I think they would never venture upon unless they had fallen into a deep sleep of carnal security. Speak of a man slumberlug at the masthead—it is nothing to a professor of religion at ease, while covetousness is his master or worldly company his delight. If professors were awake they would see their danger, and avoid sinful amusements and ungodly associations, as men fly from fierce tigers or deadly cobras.—Spurgeon.

NOTHING ever happens but once in this world. What I do now I do once and forever. It is over—it is gone, with all its eternity of solemn meaning.—Carlyle.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Archbishop of Palermo has been notified to leave his see.

—The Pope has resolved to convoke the Vatican Council again, to discuss ecclesiastical reforms.

—The Evangelical Alliance deputation has returned from Constantinople to England without presenting to the Sultan the memorial prepared by that body. The Sultan refused the deputation an audience.

—The famine among the Karens around Toungoo still continues, although the British government is now taking energetic measures to prevent absolute starvation. Many orphan children are thrown upon the hands of the missionaries.

—The Dissenters' burial bill was lost in the English Parliament by the meager majority of fourteen. The excellent English correspondent of the New York Advocate, referring to this vote, significantly adds: "Our Methodist tombstone case is slowly beginning to take form at law."

—Bishop Quintard, of Tennessee, has gone to Europe to solicit aid for the University of the South, situated on the Cumberland mountains. The university originated with Bishop Polk a few years before the war, and at one time promised to become one of the greatest schools of learning in the Union. It is under the care of the Episcopal Church.

—The Reformed Episcopal Church continues to grow. A fourth church has been organized in Chicago, and a third in Philadelphia. A provisional organization has been effected of a church in Baltimore. The first celebration of the Lord's Supper was participated in by some sixty communicants. A Ladies' Missionary Aid Society has been formed in connection with this church.

—There is one Protestant Episcopal body which knows what Christian courtesy is and exercises it. It is the Diocesan Synod of Montreal, which, being in session at the same time with the United General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, sent in a message of congratulation over the consummation of the union. The Diocesan Synod of Quebec refused to do a similar deed.

—Church and State says of the English tombstone controversy:—"Most people will be surprised to learn that the Ritualists have taken sides with Mr. Keet, and have condemned the decision of Mr. Phillimore in the strongest terms. Dr. Littledale has published a letter, in which he says Ritualistic clergymen have always addressed Wesleyan ministers by the title of reverend. This shows that the Ritualists have, at least in some respects, as much common sense as other people; though whether they act from disinterested motives in the case, or because they see in the storm that is brewing a shorter road to disestablishment, people must judge for themselves."

—Missionary efforts among the Chinese in this country have been quite successful. For some weeks past a Chinaman who has espoused Christianity has been preaching to his countrymen in the streets of Santa Barbara, Cal., with considerable success. At the recent meeting of the Congregational Association of Oregon reports were presented to the meeting of the religious condition of the native Indians, of the success of Christian labor among the Chinese, and of the progress made by Japanese students at an Oregon college. Fourteen churches are connected with the association, having a total membership of six hundred and thirty. Resolutions were adopted in favor of the Indian policy of the national government.

—In a letter to the Nashville Advocate, Rev. Joel T. Daves, of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Mexican missions, says: "Rev. Drs. Butler, Rally and Hutchinson, respectively of the Northern Methodist, Protestant Episcopal and Northern Presbyterian Churches, are pushing forward their work with zeal and energy; they are gradually but surely making their way out into the regions beyond. The thousands of God's Israel in Mexico are being led on through the wilderness, and are developed as the quickening, enlightening genius of Protestantism becomes more manifest. The very means used by Romanism—persecutions, mobs and assassinations—only serve to deepen conviction and strengthen the gospel."

—The London Methodist says: "There is some talk about Mr. Perks going to the Cape of Good Hope in the autumn, in order to inspect the mission stations and be present at some of the district meetings there. This visit may be intended to promote the formation of a separate Conference. The desirability of such a Conference is to be considered at the next three-yearly convention of all the Cape districts, which will be held in April next, at Natal. The formation of affiliated Conferences at the West Indies and the Cape has been urged repeatedly in the Methodist. If the change is made now it will be almost simultaneous with the political one proposed by the colonial office, in furtherance of which Mr. Froude has gone out to the Cape."

—The United Presbyterians have erected a missionary hospital at Cheefoo, in China. It accommodates sixty-five patients, who would otherwise be under the charge of Chinese quacks. The wards are extremely cheerful. In the height of summer the windows are thrown open, and the blinds protect any one who may be lying within from the direct rays of the sun. The beds are iron, and for mattresses reed matting is used, covered with native felt an inch thick. The walls are decorated with texts in the ornamental character, and chromo-lithographs representing Scripture scenes. Rising from the center of the building is a very handsome tower, whose clock, the gift of a kind donor, rings out the hours. Carbolic acid keeps the ward perfectly fresh. The cases treated have been for the most part of a surgical nature.

Our Young People.

CARLO'S TALE.

BY ANNE J. COLTON.

Poor Carlo was an aged dog,
A very humble setter—
He sat before the blazing log,
No one could do it better;
And when upon the table spread
There chanced to be a quail,
No matter though the bird was dead,
His scent would never fail;
But, pointing straight before his nose,
In silence he would sit,
And, if he did but chance to doze,
Would dream of hunting it.

He was the hero of a fall,
The source of all his glory;
It made the very woodcocks quail,
And all their feathers gory;
And when I sometimes ceased to play,
Or hung with graceful bend,
Some puppy, passing by, would say
The wing was near his end.

Of hearing he was rather hard,
And rather hard of seeing;
And, though he was not often scared,
He oft was caught a-fleeing;
His teeth had long been worn away,
And so, when he was fed,
Because he could not grind, they say,
He bolted it instead.

His trunk, so very large and round,
Had lost its youthful sap;
And, though there still some bark was found,
'Twas leaving the old chap.
His wonted fire was nigh gone,
And while its ardor flaming
His sparkling days had fled anon,
And all his love for gaming.

And now beneath the grassy lea
He's lying in his bed;
A better wight he lived was he,
A better now he's dead.

A Few Words

TO THE LITTLE GIRLS AND BOYS WHO READ THE ADVOCATE.

LOUISVILLE, ALA., Sept. 2, 1875.

Belonging to the Alabama Conference is a little boy two years and three months old. The first name he was called by was "The Little Bishop." Don't you think he was highly honored? He was baptized when three months old, and he was named John Henry. So you see he is a little Methodist. Every circuit he lives on he will have a pet cat. The first cat was gray, with white nose and feet. He left it, last November, to be a pet for a poor little afflicted girl that could not walk. This year he has a yellow cat that a little orphan girl gave him. How he laughs when he sees it with a large rat. He calls the rat a "wabit." He will have to give his cat to some little girl or boy soon. When his papa asks a blessing at tea he is quiet until "Amen" is said; then he jumps up, slaps his hands and says: "Gory, gory, hallelujah! I love Jesus." So you see he is a shouting Methodist. He goes to camp meeting every year. He has a little prayer which he says before he goes to bed. I expect all little girls and boys know it. He says:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take."

Henry sends his love to all the little readers. If you find words here that you do not know the meaning of, ask your pastor. He will explain them to you. Good-by.

A friend, A. J. B.

From Our Little Friends.

GREENVILLE, ALA., Sept. 12, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: I read your paper every week. My papa takes it. I did not like it when Tom used such large words. I like it so much now. If Grandpa Goodale will not keep his promise to tell us "How Baruey Milked the Bays' Nest," tell him to give us "Tom Sinkle," or the "Bee Hunt," or some of the many stories he has commenced; for I am like Harry—I think grandpa has so many stories commenced that he cannot get them straight. We have a missionary society in our Sunday school. Our pastor says he wants us to make up enough to support one native missionary in China. I am a little girl only eight years old.

Your little friend,

What the Animals Thought.

BY ADRIAN.

Little Bessie is a bright-eyed little girl about six years old. She lives in one of our largest cities in the winter, but in the summer-time she goes to the country, where she runs wild over the fields, plucking the daisies and the buttercups, and making garlands of the clover and the wild flowers. In the winter-time she likes to walk out with her papa in the beautiful streets of the great city, and see the shop windows filled with the pretty Paris dolls and wonderful toys. Altogether she is a very happy little girl.

Bessie has a little friend named Stella, a few years older than herself, with whom she spends many a happy hour. One day she invited Stella to spend a week with her in her country home. What a pleasant time they had at the old farm, watching the men make the hay, the women in the dairy making butter and cheese, and visiting the different animals in the pasture and barn-yard. There were all kinds of animals on the farm, as you will presently hear.

One bright afternoon in the autumn these two little girls started off together all alone to visit another little friend, Julie, at a neighbor's house. They were neatly dressed, and hand in hand went off as happy as two kittens.

They had got a part of the way down the road, when it was so dusty that they thought it would be better to go over the green fields by a shorter cut. So they climbed through the bars of a fence very carefully, and were delighted to find themselves in the green field.

After they had walked for a little while in the meadows they saw a funny sight. All the animals of the farm were running toward them, and soon overtook them. The little girls were quite frightened at this, and started to run as fast as they could; but it was no use, for the animals ran a great deal faster than they could.

So, tired with running, they sat down on the grass to see what would happen.

"Don't let's be afraid," said Bessie; "I don't believe they mean to hurt us, for they are good animals."

Such a noise as they all made, talking in their funny way. "Quack! quack!" said the duck, "Mo-ow," said the cow, "Ba-ah," said the sheep, "Cock-a-doo-dle-doo," said the rooster, all talking at once.

"Oh, dear," said Stella, "what do they all mean, I wonder!"

"I don't know," said Bessie; "I never heard such a noise before."

Presently a white dove flew over from the barn. "Coo-oo," said he; and then a peacock strutted along, and gave a loud screech.

"Oh," said Stella, "how funny! Why, I heard some one talking, and such a funny voice too; listen, Bessie!" and the two little girls were very still, and then they understood what the animals said.

"Ba-ah," said the old sheep; "mighty fine indeed those girls are dressed up in a sacque made from my wool, and stockings on and flannels, all from my warm coat, which was cut off last year."

"Mo-ow," answered the cow, "and those shoes were made out of my calf that was killed last year."

"Bow-wow," said the dog, "those shoe strings were made out of my brother's hide."

"Pis-h-sh," said the peacock, "Stella's got one of my feathers in her hat."

"Hiss-i-ss," replied the old white goose, "that sacque is trimmed with my feathers."

"Neigh-gh," cried the horse, switching his tail around, "what would they do if they hadn't an old horse's bones to make those fine buttons from."

"Coo-oo," chimed in the dove, "that little girl has got the white wing of my poor sister in her hat."

Both the children burst out laughing when they heard that, for by this time they saw that the animals did not intend to harm them, and they enjoyed the joke very much.

"Ha! ha!" said a little gray squirrel, "the little monkeys laugh at us, do they," and he curled his bushy tail over his back; "what would they do indeed if they had not a squirrel's fur to line their cloaks with."

"Go back to your hole," said an old goat very indignantly, "they haven't got on any fur cloaks in summer-time; but if they hadn't killed my poor kid they would have no nice gloves to wear!"

"They are all robbers," said the rooster, as he strutted about, "if they had anything of them belonging to my family I would take it away from them!"

"They are robbers," said an old hen, with a cluck! cluck! "Each one of you take what belongs to you, my friends."

"You're right," said the sheep, and all the animals chimed in: "Yes, you're right!"

"Bow-wow! Cluck-cluck! Ba-ah! Mo-ow! Pish-sh! Cock-a-doodle-doo-do!" and amidst all the noise the animals surrounded the girls.

The dove plucked out the white feather from Bessie's hat, the peacock took back her feather, the old sheep bit off the stockings and woolen sacques, the dog untied the shoe-strings, the cow took the shoes in her mouth, the horse pulled off all the bone buttons. Such a plight as they were in!

"Well!" said Stella, "I have got my straw hat on; that didn't come from any animals."

"Yes," said Bessie, "I have my gold ring on too."

Then the animals all laughed in their funny way, and the old sheep said: "Ba-ah! little girls; now run home and tell your mothers that they can't dress you up fine without the aid of all the poor animals; and whenever you meet any of us always be polite and say: Good friend, I am indebted to you for something, and I will never let any one harm you."

With that the animals all laid down the things they had taken off, and ran away together. The little girls laughed at the fun, and soon dressed themselves, and ran off to pay the visit they had started to make.

PRETTY WELL FOR A HOG.—It seems almost incredible that such a dull, stupid creature as a hog should have had the "presence of mind" which the following incident from a Western paper gives one credit for: "A very curious incident occurred yesterday, by which a hog took a free ride across the river bridge. It was about half-past three o'clock that a freight train was approaching the city, when a hog, weighing about one hundred pounds, was seen on the track at the west end of the bridge. It did not get out of the way soon enough, and the pilot of the engine struck it. Instead of knocking it off, however, the sloping front of the pilot caught his porkship and rolled him right up upon the little platform in front of the boiler. There he rose and sat looking round, and was by this time out over the bare ties, where, if he had jumped off, he would have gone down to the water. He evidently saw this, for he remained on the front of the engine, and rode all the way across the bridge. When the engine arrived on this side the hog sprang nimbly off upon the platform, near Mr. Twadell's watch-house, and, after grunting its satisfaction at its narrow escape, it moved off. It was slightly hurt in the side and one leg, but will recover."—Western Paper.

"THE MEWL," wrote a school boy, "is a larger bird than the guse or turkey. It has two legs to walk with, and two more to kick with; and it wears its wings on the side of its head. It is stubboruly backward about going forward."

More Tolerable.

The condemnation will be in proportion to the privileges, and the destruction of those whose light was inferior to ours argues the fearful consequences of rejecting the gospel. The judgments visited upon those who had but the twilight of revelation delivers an impressive warning to sinners under the Christian dispensation. The fate of Sodom was terrible in its temporal aspects, and more terrible in its eternal character. The guilty had light enough, and they were cut off as incorrigible offenders, because they would not repent. But still the Savior declares that if Sodom had enjoyed the privileges bestowed upon Capernaum "it would have remained until this day."

The grace which we trample on and resist would have led the guilty and lost of heathendom to repentance. Somehow this comparison is to tell in the great day against those who have not yielded to the gospel. "The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it." The fate of Sodom was bad enough, the men of Nineveh were turned into hell, but in the final day their unutterable woe will throw a cloud of deeper blackness over those who have heard of Jesus and trifled with the offered salvation. It is enough to dismay the stoutest and hardest to think of the rising up there will be against the sinners of this day. All the past generations will rise up. The condemned and lost of all the past ages will confront them in the judgment.

There was enough of opportunity and grace given to the least favored, and to the most ignorant and degraded, to have secured their salvation. The heathen of our own time, and of all times, were not left without gracious help. Their destruction is the result of mercy rejected. But they are to appear in an attitude of reproach to the more enlightened, and as swift witnesses against the impenitent who stand out against the appeals of a complete revelation of life. The horrors of our condemnation will be immeasurably intensified by their misery. If infinite goodness was compelled to cut off sinners whose guilt was comparatively light, what is to be the destiny of men who persist in their sins amidst the blaze of the gospel day? Any flame of perdition must have in it an indescribable agony, but there are fires of unquenchable fury more tolerable than those which shall devour the neglecters of the great salvation.

The lesson is to nations, communities and cities as well as to individuals. Corruption in various forms advances with rapid strides. We have in our modern civilization the sins of Sodom, Nineveh, Tyre. Far above Capernaum are we exalted in the greatness of our privileges. Paris, Berlin, London, New York, New Orleans, if not so altogether rotten and putrescent, have depths of vileness and uncleanness not exceeded by those ancient cities. The providence of God is not blind. God as a righteous governor rules in the world, and his judgments are being executed in the march of events. The men of Nineveh are rising up in judgment with this generation, and the fate of Sodom has its bearing upon the judgment which awaits all people who defy the authority and abuse the mercies of God. Let us only think of the Sabbath desecration, of the licentiousness, the dishonesty and lying, the unbelief and utter rejection of Christ which prevail.

The guilt of the age is greater because of its superior light and blessings. But for the leaven of piety that is in the world, but for the salt of godliness which is in the earth, the stroke would fall at once. The extremes of wickedness and of gracious privileges are seen side by side. The theater that was preached in all the summer is now a play-house on Sunday nights. While the churches are open, and sinners are called to repentance, and Christ is proclaimed, the gin mills, theaters and dance-houses are thronged. Neither Nineveh nor Sodom had such exalted privileges, nor were their sins more heinous. The most intolerable place in the judgment—the point where the withering flames are brought to their most consuming heat—is that which is reserved for those who have the gospel, and yet despise its promises and warnings.

The Public School Outrage.

Just before the opening of the city public schools, some ten days ago, the board of directors at one sitting removed over one hundred teachers, and elected others to fill their places. The most of those removed were competent and experienced teachers, and their removal must have been because they were not politically in accord with the board, and because these Radical officials wanted the places for their own friends and dependents. A negro was also elected as professor in the boys' high school, and placed over the white pupils of this institution. These partisan directors are bent upon mixing the schools. They are not content that the negro children shall have separate schools, equal in all respects to those provided for the whites, but they are determined to force upon us this most obnoxious measure, not only of putting the two races in the same rooms, but of putting negro teachers over the white pupils.

The board of directors is composed of nine negroes and eight white men, and all are represented to be ultra Radical politicians. The white population of New Orleans is 145,721, negroes 57,647, and yet the negroes have a majority in the school board, and this community is subjected to the gross injustice of having this important interest entirely in the hands of incompetent negroes and political partisans who manage the schools for the furtherance of their own sinister ends. The recent action of the board was flagrantly unjust and an outrage upon our people. The purpose to Africanize our schools, and to insult and degrade the white people, is evident. The schools are maintained by the money of the whites, and the latter compose nearly three-fourths of the population, but still this institution is to be conducted in a manner most offensive to those upon whom its support is devolved. If this extreme course does not lead to a change in the directory, it will in effect turn the schools over to the negroes, and deprive the white children of the benefits to which they are entitled.

We give below a statement from the Bulletin concerning the composition of this model school board. We are sorry to see in this illustrious company the name of the presiding elder of the New Orleans district of the Northern Methodist Church, and also editor of the Southwestern Advocate. He and Bishop Haven are the champions of miscegenation and negro social equality. Fraternity with men of this character is of course easy and desirable. The Bulletin says:

In order that the people abroad, and even some of our own people, who have been too apathetic in a matter of much moment, may fully realize the extent of the great wrong which has been wrought upon this city in the appointment of a board to govern and direct the public schools, we give the following facts:

POPULATION OF NEW ORLEANS ACCORDING TO RADICAL CENSUS.

Whites	145,721
Negroes	57,647

COMPOSITION OF THE CITY SCHOOL BOARD.

Colored.—P. B. S. Pinchback, V. E. McCarthy, J. H. Ingraham, C. F. Glaudin, J. B. Gaudet, J. A. Massicot, A. T. Dumont, T. B. Stamps, H. L. Rey.

White.—James Longstreet, H. C. Dibble, Rev. J. C. Hartzell, Alfred Shaw, T. G. Tracy, Thomas Carey, B. L. Lynch, Alfred Bourges.

The nine colored men are, every one of them, notorious politicians; every one either now holds, or has held, or is strenuously seeking office. We believe there is not a single one of them who can write an ordinarily difficult sentence in the English language correctly, while most of them are ignorant of the first requirements of an education.

The white members of the board, with the exception of Mr. Tracy, who is the editor of the Republican, and Mr. Bourges, who has been for many years connected with the schools, are also Radical politicians of the ultra stripe.

The white people who support the schools are very naturally indignant at this state of affairs, and very properly demand a change. If the school board is wise it will recognize the justice of the popular indignation and resign.

How Baltimore Stands.

We might infer from the statements and general tone of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist that the Baltimore Conference is about to go over to the Methodist Episcopal Church, horse, foot and all. The following from "Baltimore," in the Nashville Advocate, puts the matter in a more hopeful light, and goes far to explain the fraternal zeal of the Episcopal Methodist:

Of the nine districts of the Conference he mentions six as opposed to Bro. G., and, I suppose, indorsing the Episcopal Methodist on this question. Three, then, we presume, are regarded either as indifferent, or against the Episcopal Methodist. They are East Baltimore, Lexington and Roanoke districts—of course, a minority. But look at the others. Assuming that the presiding elders of the Baltimore, Washington, Winchester, Rockingham and Meoretield districts indorse the position of the Episcopal Methodist (and it is a mere assumption—even the editor does not say they do,) that does not give it the support of the ministers and members of those districts. The Lewisburg district, I know, cannot be counted as a supporter, even in its presiding elder; but of the other five, I know that the men who occupy the first appointments are heartily opposed to the course of the Episcopal Methodist. After naming six of the districts the editor says: "They alone embrace more than two-thirds of the ministry and membership of the whole Conference." Now I am not sure that he means to say two-thirds of our "ministry and membership" indorse his course, but it looks very much that way. If not, why emphasize the two-thirds? No, sir; the position of our Conference is not fairly given by that paper. I think it may be asked, with as much propriety as Dr. P. asked concerning Bro. G.: Does Dr. John Poisal represent the Baltimore Conference? and as truthfully be answered: No. The action of the Baltimore Conference at its last session, in refusing to indorse the Episcopal Methodist, seems to show that. But it did more. While Dr. Poisal was its editor the Conference, by resolution, appointed a committee of nine to inquire into the practicability of publishing a paper, under the control and as the organ of the Baltimore Conference. The committee have failed to establish a paper; but shall the Episcopal Methodist, because of their failure, be regarded as the representative of our Conference? We hope nobody will think so. There is no fear on this subject at home, but away from home it may not be understood. Young though I am, I feel interested in our church. I love it above everything else, and I pray it may be preserved from the influence of men whose zeal is not according to knowledge.

I know the things whereof I affirm. Our Conference always has been, and still is, true to the law of the church. She abides by the action of the church, whatever may be the feelings of a few individual members. Having withstood the opposition of enemies, I do not think we are likely to be overcome by the wholesale praises of our new friends, or be misled by the unwonted zeal for fraternity of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, now owned and published by a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church—of course, for us!

East Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: I left my home in Auburn on Friday, the tenth instant, in company with Dr. McCarty. We stopped a few hours in Opelika with Rev. W. M. Motley. The meeting at his church had closed, and services had begun at the Baptist church under Rev. William E. Lloyd, pastor. The meeting at the Methodist church had resulted in about seventy-five conversions. Thirty-seven had joined the Methodist Church. A number of the conversions were among the members of the church who had no satisfactory religious experience, though they had been members for years. Some will join the Baptist Church, others the Presbyterian. We took the train on the Savannah and Memphis railroad, Dr. McCarty stopping at Gold Hill, nine miles northwest of Opelika, to hold a quarterly meeting. This is near the boundary between the North Alabama and Alabama Conferences, over which a battle of two days was fought at the late General Conference at Louisville. We went forward on the railroad, in a northwesterly direction, forty-seven miles to Alexander City, a flourishing railroad town in Tallapoosa county, whence on Saturday morning we were forwarded by kind friends to Hillabee camp ground. The crops in this county are the best I have seen. The most of the cotton is large, well filled with bolls, and loaded down with the fleecy staple. The bottoms and richest lands are set apart to corn and red-topped millet, out of which last product they are making vast quantities of syrup or sorghum, which they would not exchange for your best Louisiana sirup. A merchant told me he sold a quantity of New Orleans sirup last year—will not sell any this year. Tallapoosa bids fair to be the sweetest county in the State. Cholera destroyed their hogs, and they have substituted sirup for meat.

We found on the camp ground Rev. Moses L. Whitten, presiding elder of Lafayette district; Rev. W. T. Patillo, of Pinckneyville circuit, in the bounds of which the camp meeting was held; Bro. J. W. Christian, of Fredonia circuit, and Bro. I. Q. Melton, of Dadeville circuit, besides many local brethren, and a good Baptist preacher—Bro. Couger—who pitched his tent on the ground and rendered us efficient service.

The preaching was very good. The preachers' tent was a hallowed place, consecrated to prayer and praise, and conversation full of charity and humility. The preachers went forth with their faces shining, but they wist not that their faces shone. The word of God was quick and powerful. Many were cut to the heart. Men and women of position and influence were converted. The fire spread from tent to tent. Many cold professors went back after their roll, and went forward again with bounding hearts. We felt sometimes as if we were in the land of Beulah and on the Delectable mountains. The struggles and the trials of the past year were forgotten amid the joy and triumph of the present. Heaven seemed easy of access, and the crown just ahead. Our cups were full, sometimes to overflowing. Results: Seventy-five conversions; forty applied for membership in our church, most of whom were received on the ground.

Their pastor, Rev. William T. Patillo, has been abundant in labors. He has been an apostle of family piety. He insists on the baptism of children, and will report by Conference about one hundred infants baptized. He urges all the heads of families to the duty of family prayer. Two-thirds of the heads of families in the circuit hold family prayer; and this, where there are six hundred members in the circuit, is very remarkable. The people in that country, old and young, all work. It is said they nearly all pay their debts. To their neighbors this is true, but the Lord is their heaviest creditor. Preacher and presiding elder assessed $890. Paid to date, $224! But the stewards say the deficiency is on account of a want of system. They adopted the assessment plan at this late day, and hope to get it all.

Bro. Whitten has a very large, hilly, rocky, mountainous district, but it is manned in the main by young men of great devotion and promise. There are only two traveling elders in the district. I would say more about him and his preachers, but I don't belong to the "Preachers' Mutual Admiration Society."

Rev. Largus R. Bell, of Talladega circuit, was present and gave us a graphic account of the great revival at Mumford, a village on the Selma, Rome and Dalton railroad. One hundred and sixty conversions, and one hundred and three added to our church, and a ball-room of sixty-three devotees broken up. I got home in time to hear of the revival in Salem, the seat of our late District Conference, in which there were sixty conversions in one week. In all these revivals—Mumford, Opelika, etc., where the work has been wonderful—laymen have come to the front. It looks like the days of old at Jerusalem, when the people, not the apostles, were scattered abroad, and went everywhere preaching the word.

B. B. ROSS.

Mr. Gladstone and Vaticanism.

Mr. Gladstone has collected in one volume his recent series of pamphlets on the papacy, and has enriched them by a preface noticeable for acuteness and power, in which he offers "a few corroborative remarks and statements," as follows:

1. The intention of those who rule the ostensible rulers of the Roman Church to disturb civil society will doubtless be developed in a variety of forms, as circumstances and seasons may serve, but at present it is nowhere more conspicuous than in regard to the law of marriage. In this intricate subject many doubtful questions may arise; but there can be no doubt as to the shameful outrages on morality and decency which are commended in the works of Perrone, and of which we have recently had within our own borders a signal example. I will very briefly sketch the leading facts of the case I refer to, but without indicating names, dates or places, as they are not required for my purpose. More than thirty years ago X., a male British subject, was married to Y., in a foreign country, but under the provisions of an act of Parliament, by the chaplain of the British legation, in the house and in the presence of the British minister. Both professed the religion of the English Church. They lived together for more than a quarter of a century; and a family, the issue of the marriage, grew up to maturity. In the later years of this union the husband formed an adulterous connection with a foreign woman. After a period of much patience on the part of the wife, a separation took place. In a short time he joined the Church of Rome; and about four years [illegible] under the authority of certain [illegible] ecclesiastice, and in an [illegible] Roman Catholic chapel, he went through the form of marriage with his partner in guilt. He was subsequently informed by a higher functionary that he must obtain a judgment from Rome. He made application accordingly; and the judgment given was that the original marriage was null, and that the second so-called marriage, so far as appeared—"Dummodo nullum aliud obstet canonicum impedimentum"—was valid. In the meantime the injured wife had applied to a court for the judicial establishment of her position. She was duly declared the lawful wife, and the bigamous husband admitted that she was such according to British law. Within the jurisdiction of that law he had taken his paramour to his paternal estate in ——shire, and had designated and caused her to be addressed there as his lawful wife, to the great scandal of his neighbors, who were well acquainted with the true wife. He likewise entered his spurious offspring, born since the pretended marriage, as legitimate; and a witness of position and character on the spot asserts that the woman received visits, and the most marked and open countenance, at the husband's seat, from Roman Catholic priests and sisters of charity. There is not in this statement one word beyond dry fact. It might have been much enlarged; but it is indeed a statement of which no epithets could heighten the significance. The judgment from Rome, to which I have referred, has lately been published textually in a leading German paper. And notice was taken in a London print, a considerable time back, of the judicial proceeding I have mentioned, which included the main facts, but simply as a piece of law intelligence. Except in two articles of the Saturday Review, this gross outrage, which is also a heavy crime, has not been thought worthy of notice by the newspaper press. But that to which it is my duty to point is that the act has had the full countenance and approval of the highest authorities of the papal church. If there be those who doubt the allegations I have made, I have only to state that Cardinal Manning is sufficiently cognizant of the case, and will best know whether he can contradict them. Other Roman prelates are, I believe, in the same condition, but I do not wish unnecessarily to localize or identify the narrative. To such a statement as this it is but a feeble postscript to add that in July, 1874, the same Roman authority, acting on behalf of the Pope, and in a rescript addressed to the Archbishop of Munich, authorized a person therein named to procced to a new marriage after a divorce from a first wife previously obtained; not, of course, because the divorce was valid, but because the original marriage, being a Protestant marriage at Munich, was void. I might refer to other cases, not as parallel to that which I have given at some length, but simply as auxiliary proofs of the Intention of the Roman Church, whenever she thinks it may be safely ventured, to trample the law under foot. Even from so remote a quarter as one of the South Sea Islands we are informed by Mr. Herbert Meade (a) of the complaint of a Baptist missionary that his married converts are tempted to become Romish proselytes by the promise to give them fresh wives if they then desire it. And yet a London newspaper, deemed to be in the first ranks of enlightened civilization, has, within the last few weeks, written as follows on the discussions respecting Vaticanism: "Such discussions are not unsuited to beguile a vacant hour; it is only when they are forced upon us as involving issues of vital moment, and requiring the immediate attention of the statesman and of every Englishman who desires to save his country from ruin, that we deprecate the mistaken zeal which exalts them to a fictitious importance."

The matter thus relegated into the category of insignificance, and reserved for a vacant hour, amounts to no more than I now describe. The Latin Church has probably a hundred and eighty million of adherents; a clergy counted by hundreds of thousands; a thousand bishops, and the Pope at the head. Nearly the entire hierarchical power in this great communion, together with a faction everywhere spread, and everywhere active, among its laity, are now deliberately set upon a design distinguished by the following characteristics: Internally it aims at the total destruction of right—not of right as opposed to wrong, but of right opposed to arbitrary will. Such right there shall be none, if the conspiracy succeeds, in the bishops against the Pope, in the clergy against the bishops or the Pope, in the laity against any of the three. Externally it maintains the right and duty of the spirituality, thus organized, to override at will, in respect of right and wrong, the entire action of the civil power; and likewise to employ force, as and when it may think fit, for the fulfillment of its purposes. Nowhere, perhaps, has the design been so succinctly described as in the remarkable work entitled "Otto Mesi a Roma" (page 194.) It is a design to establish "absolutism of the church, and absolutism in the church."

2. To what has been written in the pages I now reprint, with respect to the intention of proceeding to blood upon the first suitable occasion, I will only add the very explicit declaration of Archbishop (now Cardinal) Manning, at the meeting of the League of Saint Sabastian on the twentieth of January, 1874: "Now, when the nations of Europe have revolted, and when they have dethroned, as far as men can dethrone, the vicar of Jesus Christ, and when they have made the usurpation of the Holy City a part of international law—when all this had been done, there is only one solution of the difficulty—a solution, I fear, impending, and that is the terrible scourge of continental war—a war which will exceed the horrors of any of the wars of the first empire. I do not see how this can be averted. And it is my firm conviction that, in spite of all obstacles, the vicar of Jesus Christ will be put again in his own rightful place."

This speech was delivered some months before the attention of the British public had been specially invited to the plans of the conspiracy. The idea of force is not new. It took effect in the French occupation of Rome from 1849 to 1866, and of Civita Vecchia at a still later time. At present, and for the moment, we have words of a milder tone; and invitations to Italy to destroy that national unity which she has wrought out with so much suffering, and after so many generations of depression. At the proper time the more outspoken and more sanguinary strain will of course be resumed.

3. It has long been customary to quote the case of Maryland in proof that, more than two centuries ago, the Roman Catholic Church, where power was in its hands, could use it for the purposes of toleration. Archbishop Manning has repeated the boast, and with very large exaggeration. I have already shown (b) from Bancroft's History that in the case of Maryland there was no question of a merciful use of power toward others, but simply of a wise and defensive prudence with respect to themselves—that is to say, so far as the tolerant legislation of the colony was the work of Roman Catholics. But it does not appear to have been their work. By the fourth article of the charter we find that no church could be consecrated there except according to the laws of the church at home. The tenth article guaranteed to the colonists generally "all privileges, franchises and liberties of this our kingdom of England" (c.) It was in 1649 that the Maryland act of toleration was passed; which, however, prescribed the punishment of death for any one who denied the Trinity. Of the small legislative body which passed it two-thirds appear to have been Protestant, the recorded numbers being sixteen and eight respectively (d.) The colony was open to the emigration of Puritans and all Protestants, and any permanent and successful oppression by a handful of Roman Catholics was altogether impossible. But the colonial act seems to have been an echo of the order of the House of Commons at home, on the twenty-seventh of October, 1645, that the inhabitants of the Summer Islands, and such others as shall join themselves to them, "shall, without any molestation or trouble, have and enjoy the liberty of their consciences in matters of God's worship;" and of a British ordinance (e) of 1647. The writer whom I quote (f) ascribes the resolution of the Commons to the entreaties of the friends of Williams, the Independent, of Rhode Island, and of Copelaud, a learned Episcopal divine, who shared his views of toleration. Upon the whole, then, the picture of Maryland legislation is a gratifying one; but the historic theory which assigns the credit of it to the Roman Church has little foundation in fact.

Centenary College.

The catalogue for 1874-75 has been overlooked by us. It is very beautiful, and contains such information as parents need who are seeking a school for their sons. The session opens on the first Monday of October, and students should be on hand promptly at the time, if possible. Boarding and tuition are as low as at any of our first-rate colleges, the location is healthy, and the social and religious surroundings are all that can be desired. The college is the joint property of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences. The faculty is composed of gentlemen who have experience in teaching and in the management of institutions of learning. The president, Dr. C. G. Andrews, is a Christian gentleman, and a noble model for the young men who may be committed to his care. Students cannot be in better hands. Our friends in the Southwest will do well to patronize Centenary. Get the boys ready and send them to Jackson, La. For the times the patronage last year was tolerably good, and the results were eminently satisfactory. There should be two hundred students there this year. Let the preachers bring the claims of the college before the people, and let all wake up to the imperative duty of educating the youth of the land, and of sustaining our own schools. For catalogues and all desired information address Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., Jackson, La. Catalogues can also be obtained at the office of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

FULL particulars of the effects of the disastrous storm at Galveston have not reached us. The damage to property has been great, many lives have been lost, and much distress and suffering exist. The death of Rev. Robert Alexander, D. D., is reported, but shall hope until the sad tidings receives further confirmation. The Galveston News of the nineteenth says:

The dwelling of Rev. Robert Alexander (son-in-law of Mr. David Ayres, of this city,) who resided on Adams Island, together with every house on the island, has been swept away, and Mr. Alexander and his family reported drowned.

DREW THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.—The arrangements for the coming year have been completed. The term begun on Thursday, September 16. On Wednesday, September 22, at two P. M., the public opening exercises took place, when addresses were delivered by Bishop Janes, Rev. C. S. Harrower, Rev. G. F. Kettell, D. D., and Hon. George J. Ferry.

The faculty consists of J. F. Hurst, D. D., James Strong, S. T. D., D. P. Kidder, D. D., H. A. Buttz, D. D., John Miley, D. D., Prof. Mark Bailey, A. M., W. W. Martin, A. B., and C. W. Smiley, A. B. In addition to the regular work of the faculty, the following persons will deliver special lectures: Bishops Simpson, Foster, Wiley; Rev. Drs. Nelson, Wentworth, Bowne and Corson, and Chancellor Theo. Runyon, LL. D.

HERE is some good advice, says the Western Methodist, which we find in a religious exchange. A brother, whose tobacco costs him a dollar a month, is exhorted to give up the use of the weed, and devote the dollar a month—$12 a year—to the cause of missions. To which is added this improvement: And now also let each brother who does not chew tobacco, and thereby saves a dollar a month, give that also to the cause of missions.

THE READERS of our Sunday school periodicals will part with Dr. Haygood with universal regret. He has given general satisfaction, and has filled the position with great ability. Dr. Cunnyngham, who succeeds Dr. Haygood, is a good writer, and is well qualified for the duties.

CHANGE OF TIME.—Rev. Thomas Mullett, pastor at Alexandria, La., writes as follows:

ALEXANDRIA, Sept. 10, 1875.

Mr. Editor: I wrote you some time back inviting you to the camp meeting near this place. This is to inform you that the time has been changed to the fourteenth of October.

AT ONE of our schools recently, in answer to the question, "What's the difference between an island and a continent, and upon which do we live?" a bright little shaver replied: "The difference is that a continent is much larger than an island, and we live on bread and meat and other things."

IF WE would have powerful minds we must think; if we would have faithful hearts we must love; if we would have strong muscles we must labor. These include all that is valuable in this life.

COWARDICE asks: Is it safe? Expediency asks: Is it politic? Vanity asks: Is it popular? But conscience asks: Is it right?—Punshon.

Publisher's Department.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

EMORY COLLEGE, OXFORD, GA.—The advertisement of this noble institution appears in our columns this week. The president combines greatness with humility, and is a model, both as a gentleman and as a Christian, which our young men will do well to copy. The professors, as far as known to the writer, have been judiciously selected, and the society at Oxford is such that we can never think of the delightful friendships and unostentatious Christian hospitality of the people of that happy town without almost envying the young men who have the privilege of enjoying them.

CARPETINGS.—Mr. Stephen A. Spencer, 339 Sixth avenue, New York, offers to the public, through our advertising columns, a large assortment of Brussels, tapestry, three-ply, ingrain and other carpets at surprisingly low prices. The special attention of committees appointed to procure carpets for churches, lodges and public institutions is invited, which he proposes to supply at greatly reduced rates.

THE NEW SONG.—Messrs. S. T. Gordon & Son, 13 East Fourteenth street, New York, offer to the lovers of song a new revival song-book with the above title. Forty books have been laid under contribution to obtain the selected pieces, which, with one hundred new pieces, make up a book of 256 pages, and containing 300 songs. See advertisement.

TIDY FASTENER.—Mr. George Betts, No. 513 Broadway, New York, has laid the public under obligations, among many other useful inventions and novelties, for a patent tidy fastener, represented by a cut in his advertisement elsewhere, to which we call attention.

STEEL PENS.—Messrs. Harrison, Bradford & Co., steel pen manufacturers, 75 John street, New York, invite attention to their admirable pens. See advertisement in another column.

THE AMAZON Red Raspberry, brought to view in the advertisement of J. & W. K. Judefind, Edesville, Kent county, Md., is worth the attention of farmers and gardeners.

OUR READERS are referred to the advertisement of Keep, Raymond & Co., wholesale grocers, provision dealers and commission merchants, 77 and 79 Poydras street.

This house, in its present organization, is but the development of a long series of years of prosperous commercial enterprise. The name of E. S. Keep has stood before the community for forty years unimpeached for commercial honor and Christian principle, while the active partners, as well-trained business men, guided by religious principles, are exteosively kaown and appreciated.

In adding a wholesale grocery department (exclusive of liquors) to their former extensive business, this house intend to carry out a line of strict integrity in dealing with their customers. It gives us pleasure, in these times of demoralized public opinion, to see our prominent business houses laying hold of the foundation principles of unswerving honesty in trade as the Christian rule of justice toward their fellow-men. The results of such a course are certain—as sure as the promise and the blessing of God can make it. We take pleasure in commending this house to the attention of our country merchants, with the assurance that they will find quality and prices to their satisfaction, with weight and measure guaranteed.

SASH, BLINDS, DOORS.—Messrs. Roberts & Co., proprietors of the Louisiana Steam Sash, Blind and Door Factory, Nos. 301, 303, 305 and 307 Gravier street, are among our very best citizens. They are reliable in every respect, they keep the best machinery and best mechanics, and are conscientious in the execution of their work. You may with full confidence send any order to them which you want filled, with the assurance that it will be as faithfully done as if you superintended it in person. See their advertisement in another column.

HOUSE-FURNISHING STORE.—Mr. Samuel E. Moore, whose advertisement of house-furnishing goods, crockery, China, glassware, etc., appears to-day, is one of our very best citizens, and most honorable and conscientious merchants. We have no hesitation in saying that any orders in his line sent to him will be faithfully attended to. He has had much experience in the business, and has a large quantity of choice goods on hand.

CANCERS REMOVED.—Drs. Park & McLeish, No. 21 East Sixteenth street, New York, propose, in their advertisement in another column to send medicines by express for the prompt relief of cancers, or on application to send book of references and testimonials. See card.

S. COLLINS & Co.'s printing ink we have been using for several years on the ADVOCATE, and we find none better. See advertisement elsewhere.

THOSE of our readers who propose to visit Cincinnati during the coming Industrial Exposition will be glad to know that this paper can be seen on file at the office of E. N. Freshman, advertising agent, 129 West Fourth street, where all facilities will be extended them to read their home news.

MEDICAL.

THIS unrivaled Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all Diseases Caused by Derangement of the Liver.

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a Bitter or Bad Taste in the Mouth, Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels Alternately Costive and Lax, Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done, Debility, Low Spirits, a Thick, Yellow Appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and Death will ensue.

This Great Unfailing Specific will not be Found the Least Unpleasant.

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heartburn, etc.,

Farm, Garden and Household.

The Food of Swine.

If there is any one thing in rural practice which needs reforming more than another, it is the manner of raising and feeding swine. From the time they are large enough to eat they are offered all manner of refuse about the place, such as rank weeds, filthy slops, spoiled vegetables and meats, dead fowls, etc. They are allowed to rummage the dung-yard and glean the refuse of food in the faces of cattle and horses, on the ground of economy. But we may imagine the quantity of food saved in this way is very insignificant—not to exceed the value of a bushel of shelled corn a year among the whole stock on an ordinary sized farm. The objections to the practice of keeping swine in this way are so serious, however, that the reasons in favor of it have no force at all. The origin of trichinosis in swine may be always traced to the consumption of vile stuffs in their food, or being housed and yarded amidst filth and foul air. Every few months the press announces a case of trichina in an individual or a whole family, with all the horrible details and sufferings which attend the parasitic attack. Only lately some new cases are reported here in the West, which are alarming.

We are quite sure that every farmer, and every one who feeds and fattens a pig, will only need to have their attention called to so important and serious a matter to secure a complete reform in the practice of feeding an animal which will take whatever is offered to it, and will live in the most filthy holes and yards. On the farm the swine should have clover pasture, and for swill only milk and corn meal; no dish-water or meat scraps from the table, as these are sure to putrify and poison the mass in the barrel or tank. Pure water, with a little meal added, is preferable. The dish-water may go to the compost heap, and the scraps on the table to the poultry while they are fresh. Spoiled meats should be buried or mixed with composted materials. They should never be given to any domestic animal.

Large numbers of swine are frequently confined in small quarters, with very little regard to cleanliness or pure air. Of course some of them will lose appetite—the first sign of derangement of the organs of nutrition and assimilation. They do not thrive, but they are kept along till slaughtering-time, and are dressed and packed among the lot. Such animals are extremely liable to be infested with trichinæ and other parasites; and those who consume them as food expose themselves to sickness, diseases of a lingering nature, and to death in a most horrible form.

Interests, therefore, as dear as health and life require a thorough reform in keeping and feeding swine. Let their food be as pure as that which other animals consume. Let them be kept in clean quarters and have pure air. Let diseased or unthrifty animals be separated from those in health, and we may have no fears of trichinosis among either swine or human beings.—Detroit Tribune.

PHENOMENA IN PLANT LIFE.—To show still more impressively the peculiar powers of the wood and bark to conduct the crude and elaborated saps in either direction, and to act either as roots or branches, as circumstances require, we will describe an experiment performed by a French gardener, M. Clarillet, at Vincennes, in 1866 and 1867. He selected two dwarf pear-trees, grafted on quince roots, which were from four to five feet high. One of them was carefully dug up in April, 1866, and fastened in an inverted position above the other. The leading shoots of the two trees were now flattened on one side with a knife, and the two surfaces firmly bound together in the usual manner of splice grafting. The two shoots grew together, and in the course of the summer following a few leaves appeared on the main stem of the inverted pear-tree, and also on the main branches of the quince roots, which were entirely in the air some eight or ten feet from the ground. The next spring scions from four varieties of pear were set upon the four main branches of the quince roots, two of which lived and grew several inches. Meanwhile the inverted pear-tree bore two pears. Here, then, was a composite tree, consisting, first, of a root of quince, then a pear-tree, upon this an inverted pear-tree, which had branches consisting of inverted quince roots, and these were surmounted by pear-shoots of two unlike kinds.—President W. S. Clark, before Massachusetts Board of Agriculture.

TANSY FOR BOTS IN HORSES.—A correspondent of the Department of Agriculture says: "It appears from remarks made by different writers that none know of any certain remedy. I know of a remedy safe and certain, discovered in the following way: About thirty years ago a friend lost by bots a very fine horse. He took from the stomach of the horse about a gill of bots, and brought them to my office to experiment upon. He made preparations of every remedy he had heard of, and put some of them into each. Most had no effect, a few affected them slightly, but sage tea more than anything else; that killed them in fifteen hours. He concluded that he would kill them by using nitric acid, but it had no more effect on them than water—the third day they were as lively as when put in. A bunch of tansy was growing by my office. He took a handful of that, bruised it, added a little water, squeezed out the juice and put some in; they were dead in one minute. Since then I have given it to every horse I have seen affected with bots, and have never known it to fail of giving entire relief. My friend had another horse affected with bots, several years later. He gave him the tansy in the morning and a dose of salts in the evening; the next morning he took up from the excretions three half pints of bots."

HOW TO AVOID COLDS.—An editorial in the British Medical Journal, on catching cold, concludes thus: The practical considerations which are the outcomes of this review of the pathology of colds are these: Never to wear wet clothes after active muscular exertion has ceased, but to change them at once; to meet the loss of the body heat by warm fluids and dry clothes; to avoid long-sustained loss of heat which is not met by increased production of heat; to increase the tonicity of the vessels of the skin by cold bath, etc., so educating them to contract readily on exposure by a partial adoption, indeed, of the "hardening" plan; to avoid too warm, and debilitating rooms and temperatures; to take especial care against too great loss of heat when the skin is glowing; and to prevent the inspiration of cold air by the mouth by some protecting agent, as a respirator. We can readily understand how a respirator should be an effective protection against winter bronchitis in those so disposed.

SAYS the Scientific American: "If musquitoes or other blood-suckers infest our sleeping-rooms at night we uncork a bottle of the oil of pennyroyal, and these animals leave in great haste, nor will they return so long as the air in the room is loaded with the fumes of that aromatic herb. If rats enter the cellar, a little powdered potash, thrown in their holes or mixed with meal and scattered in their runways, never fails to drive them away. Cayenne pepper will keep the buttery and store-room free from ants and cockroaches. If a mouse makes an entrance into any part of your dwellings, saturate a rag with cayenne, in solution, and stuff it into the hole, which can then be repaired with either wood or mortar. No rat or mouse will eat that rag for the purpose of opening communication with a depot of supplies."

COCOANUT DROPS.—One cocoanut, half a pound of sugar, two eggs; grate the cocoanut. Mix the yolks of the eggs with the sugar and beat well; then beat the whites to a stiff froth, and add to the sugar and eggs. Afterward stir in the grated cocoanut gradually. Add flour until stiff enough to drop them on brown paper. Bake in a quick oven. (Grease the pan first.) Take out when they are of a light brown color.

THE great end of a good education is to form a reasonable man.

Our office in the entrance to the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 20 and 22 West Fourth street, where all our members are constantly passing, gives us the best of facilities for exhibiting samples of Grain, Cotton and Manufactured Articles, which advantage we offer to those desiring our services.

From the Cincinnati Price Current, March 13, 1869.

"We desire to call the attention of merchants in the interior to the card of Messrs. H. D. Rogers & Co., which is published in another column. This firm proposes introducing a new business, namely: filling orders for any kind of Merchandise or Manufactured Goods to be found in this market, charging only a small commission, thus enabling country merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and indeed all classes, to procure any article they may need at the lowest cash price, without incurring the expenses of coming to the city. And as Mr. Rogers is thoroughly conversant with the city trade in all its departments, and one whose integrity and fidelity to the interests of his customers are of the highest order, no doubts need be entertained by those sending their orders to this firm that they will be faithfully attended to."

Quotations furnished on application. Shippers and others forwarding samples will have their value ascertained, and an offer made, if practicable.

PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 18, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Scientific.

—The air that is supplied to the houses of Parliament passes through filters of cotton wool. After being used for a short time the filters become of a heavy, murky brown color, and thick with dust and organic impurities. The sleeves through which the air is first passed have deposited near them a heap of intercepted particles.

—M. D. Conway writes to the Cincinnati Commercial that Mr. Norman Lockyer, the eminent astronomer, who wrote the wonderfully comprehensive articles in the London Times on the transit of Venus, said to him, in reply to a question whether he felt satisfied with the results of the late transit observations: "Whatever was done was done by the Americans. They seem to be the only people now that take hold of such things in the right way."

—M. P. Truchot states that glass vessels in which various liquids, and even pure water are boiled, give up by degrees a small quantity of their substance—silica, potash, soda and lime. The analysis is the more erroneous the longer the boiling is kept up. This, at least, is what results from the use of glasses brought from Germany and sold at Nancy in 1873 and 1874. This fact may be shown by boiling in a flask pure water mixed with a tincture of red cabbage or sirup of violets, slightly reddened by an acid. After boiling for a few minutes the liquid turns green. French glasses, with a base of soda, are not sensibly attacked, and therefore do not offer this inconvenience.

—A series of experiments has lately been made by the English war department with a view of ascertaining the practical effect of Prof. Abel's proposed plan for the bursting of common shells filled with water, by means of a detonator consisting of dry compressed gun cotton enveloping a small cap of fulminate of mercury. Some months ago the practicability of exploding sixteen-pounder common shells in this manner was satisfactorily established, and the result of such an arrangement was the bursting of a shell into three hundred fragments, whereas only about thirty pieces were produced by the explosion of an ordinary bursting charge of gunpowder. The effect of such an explosion among troops in the field could not be otherwise than disastrous in the extreme. Lately, however, experiments have been made with nine-inch common shells, which far exceed in effect that of any conducted with the field-service common shell. On this occasion the bursting element employed was wet gun cotton, in lieu of water. The projectiles then being filled with some eight or nine pounds of wet compressed gun cotton, and a detonator as described above being fitted into the fuse-hole socket, they were fired by an ordinary electric fuse. The result was extraordinary, the shells bursting literally into thousands of pieces.

WHAT is that which a rich man always wants, and a poor man always has? Nothing.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their bimidle skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLIPPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

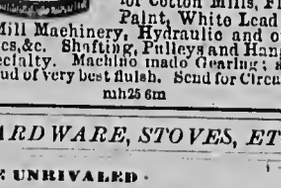
THE DUBOIS

FLANGE COTTON GIN.



$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents bolls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample but of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80-SAW STANDS, belt or right. Price, $4.50 per Saw.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending September 21:

Mississippi river and bayous	1,627
Red river	799
Ouachita river	263
Railroads	772
Lake	12
Mobile	1 518
Texas	149
Total	5,140

On Saturday the movement exhibited only a moderate degree of animation, the sales embracing 850 bales. On Monday the market opened with some inquiry, but mostly from buyers who claimed further concessions, which factors would not make, and the business during the morning was of limited extent, after which parties came together more freely, and the entire business summed up 1,150 bales. Prices exhibited some irregularity. Good staple kinds and well ginned were in special request, and, being in scant supply, continued to command outside rates or a fraction more; but other descriptions were easier, without any quotable variation, except in some cases in which factors were compelled to make liberal concessions in order to effect sales. Middling of the general run sold at 13¼c., but good staple commanded more, and 13¾c. was refused for a desirable lot of this description. On Tuesday the movement during the morning exhibited little animation, but later in the day became quite active and resulted in sales of 1,900 bales, which is the largest business reported this season. Prices were generally easier, but the kinds most in request gave way less than those which have been neglected, and, in fact, unsalable unless at liberal concessions. Quotations have been reduced ¼c. in most grades, and ⅛@¼c. in some, but sales have been made at even less than the inside figures. A decline in foreign exchange had an unfavorable influence.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 1 800 bales, against 3,250 for the corresponding time last week and 576 the week before. We quote:

Strict ordinary	11	@ 11¼

Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

SPRING CREEK CAMP MEETING.—There will be a camp meeting at Spring Creek camp ground, commencing on Friday night before the second Sabbath in October next. One and all are cordially invited to attend. This meeting will be carried on strictly on the self-sustaining plan. We will have a large boarding tent and public lot completed by the time of meeting for the accommodation of any who come unprepared to take care of themselves. Board will be furnished at a reasonable rate. The public tent will furnish a place for sleeping, but no bedding. All will bring their blankets or quilts with them. We want our preachers to attend. We will take care of them.

H. B. NASH,
J. A. EKVAN,
D. BREWER,
Committee.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Providence camp ground, fourteen miles east of Hazlehurst, Miss., commencing October 7, 1875. Preachers and people are invited to attend. There will be accommodations, for all who do not tent, at reasonable rates—fifty cents per meal, and fifty cents for lodging. The meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. Brethren, come in the name of Jesus. P. A. JOHNSTON.

THE CAMP MEETING of the Gaston circuit, Demopolis district, Alabama Conference, near DeSotoville, in the northern portion of Choctaw county, Ala., will begin October 1, 1875. The meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. Ministerial brethren from a distance by rail will please be at Cuba station early on Friday morning, October 1. C. B. DUBOSE, P. C.

THE CAMP MEETING for the Rapides circuit will begin on Thursday before the third Sabbath in October. Ministers are not only invited, but they are earnestly requested to attend. The camp ground is six miles north-east of Pineville, on the Bayou Flaggon. Come one! come all! J. L. P. SHEPPARD, P. C.

THE Eufaula district camp meeting, at Wilkie Springs, near Mount Andrew, Barbour county, Ala., will commence on Saturday night before the fourth Sabbath in September and continue four days. The preachers of the district are expected to be present, and those outside, both itinerant and local, are cordially invited to attend. Let all come praying for the salvation of the people. W. H. ELLISON, P. E.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Sepulga circuit, Prattville district, Alabama Conference, in Monroe county, Ala., ten miles from Pineapple, Selma and Gulf railroad, and eighteen miles from Georgiana and twenty-two miles from Greenville, M. and M. railroad, commencing on Friday night, October 1. Ministerial aid is solicited. J. M. SCOTT, P. C.

THE Summit district camp meeting will be held at Magnolia, Miss., on the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, commencing October 7, 1875. It will be held strictly on the self-sustaining plan. Ample arrangements will be made to furnish cheap transportation, fare and lodging on said occasion.

C. C. GIBSON,
Chairman of Executive Committee.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Beulah camp ground, near Fort Jessup, La., commencing on the eighth day of October, 1875. The meeting will be on the self-supporting plan. Provision will be made especially for the preachers. Everybody is invited to attend our camp meeting. J. M. FRANKLIN, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Pinkney circuit, Mississippi Conference, twelve miles west of Enterprise, near the Enterprise and Mount Rose road, beginning on Friday night, the first day of October, 1875. It will be held strictly on the self-sustaining plan. There will be conveyance for ministers at Enterprise, Miss., and Newton, Miss., on Friday morning. Ministers are invited and urged to attend.

J. H. HELLAND, P. C.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting to be held on the Saline Bayou, near Pleasant Grove church, twelve miles west of Winnfield, in Winn parish, La., will commence on Thursday night, October 21.

All are invited to come prepared to take care of themselves, as the meeting will be conducted on the self-sustaining plan. Ministers are respectfully invited, and will be provided for.

D. A. BONNIE, P. C.

THE China Grove camp meeting will commence on Friday night before the first Sabbath in October next, and close on Wednesday morning following. Ministers of the Methodist Episcopal Church South are cordially invited to attend. ANDUA DOWLING, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Rachliff's Mill, eleven miles north of Springville La., on the Springville circuit, Louisiana Conference, to commence on Friday, October 1, 1875. Ministers of the gospel are especially invited to attend. PHILIP ALLEN, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting nine miles north of Eutaw, Ala., commencing on Thursday night before the third Sabbath in October. Preachers, local and travelling, are invited.

DYING SUMMER.

BY M. BETHAM EDWARDS.

On tawny hills in faded splendor dreel,
Of rusty purple and of tarnished gold.
Now like some Eastern monarch sad and old,
The discrowned summer lieth down to rest!
A mournful mist hangs o'er the mellow plain,
O'er watery meads that slide down pine clad heights,
And wine-red woods where song no more delights;
But only wounded birds cry out in pain.
A pallid glory lingers in the sky,
Faint scenes of wilding flowers float in the air,
All nature's voices murmur in despair:
"Was summer crowned so late—so soon to die?"
But with a royal smile she whispers: "Cease,
If life is joy and triumph, death is peace!"

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, Sept. 20.—The greatest suffering prevails here among the poorer classes, and many in the wealthier class are in distress. People at the East End have been washed out of their houses, their clothing lost and provisions destroyed. Help is needed now.

GALVESTON, Sept. 21.—The steamship Harlan has just arrived. The purser states that the town of Indianola is almost entirely demolished. Lighthouses, wharves, business houses and dwellings are broken in pieces or swept away. There are only three houses remaining which are not damaged. The telegraph office is gone, and the signal office damaged. The telegraph lines are down for miles and the railroad washed away. Houses, fences and trees are piled up in broken masses in the streets. The reports of the loss of life are conflicting. All agree there were one hundred to one hundred and fifty lives lost. The purser states that on account of the excitement it was impossible to obtain the correct number. The steamship returned with her cargo of goods, as there was no place where she could land.

BOSTON, Sept. 22.—In answer to the appeal for aid from Mayor Davies, of Galveston, Mayor Cobb authorized him to draw for $5,000 to assist the sufferers by the recent floods.

GALVESTON, Sept. 23.—The citizens here who were appointed at a meeting for relief for Indianola and other towns west of us succeeded in raising $3,378 in money yesterday, besides large contributions of provisions of all kinds, and clothing. The schooner Agnes left for Indianola at five o'clock yesterday with a number of citizens, carrying sufficient money and provisions to aid those people. The schooner will arrive there to-day.

HOUSTON, Sept. 23.—Five houses left in Matagorda. No lives lost. Fifteen families living on Matagorda peninsula are supposed to have perished.

The loss of planters is estimated at two-thirds; picking backward. The sugar-cane was leveled. The tide rose twelve to fourteen feet. It could be seen coming forward in a plateau six feet deep on land hitherto untouched.

Only two or three houses left in Vilasco and Quintaro. The people saved nothing. Fifty persons lived in Quintaro and fifty in Vilasco. It will cost $100,000 to float the Austria. The open cotton was all blown out over a large area.

RICHMOND, September 23.—Foley's statue of Gen. Thomas J. (Stonewall) Jackson, presented to Virginia by Hon. Beresford Hope, M. P., and other English guests, which arrived here last evening from Baltimore, was formally received to-day by Gov. Kemper.

GALVESTON, Sept. 24.—Mrs. Herndon and family, reported lost at Vilasco, are safe. Dr. Alexander and family, reported lost at Lynchburg, are saved. They lost everything but what they had on.

An Austin special to the News says that contributions for the sufferers on the coast will reach $2,500.

The adjutant general telegraphs to the Secretary of War asking if the government aid, as in the Alabama overflow, can be extended to the sufferers on the coast of Texas. The Secretary of War replies that the Texas district inundated does not lie within the scope of country included in the law authorizing aid by the War Department, and he can extend no assistance. A San Antonio special of the twenty-third says:

"The storm which blasted the coast did no damage here, and very little rain fell. The wind blew a perfect gale. The citizens of San Antonio, in a public meeting to-day, appointed a committee of thirty to solicit subscriptions for the relief of the stricken people of Indianola and other places. The committee consists of the most prominent citizens and clergy of the city, and good results are expected."

The military telegraph line was completed here yesterday, and is working from Fort Clark.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.—The horse disease is rapidly spreading throughout New Jersey. The disease is pronounced of the cerebro-spinal meningitis type. Number of deaths, fourteen per cent.

The City of Berlin has arrived from Queenstown, making the passage in seven days, eighteen hours and two minutes, being the fastest time either east or west.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Sept. 26.—The horse disease is rapidly spreading in this city and country. It not only affects the throat, but seems also to affect the heart. All of the horses in the city railroad stables are affected, and to-morrow the cars will be run on half-hour time only.

NEW YORK, Sept. 27.—The Herald has advices from Henry M. Stanley, dated village of Kagehiji, district of Mehambra, March 1 and May 15. He had reached Victoria Nyanza Lake, having accomplished the remarkable march of seven hundred and twenty miles in one hundred and three days. During the journey he passed through a totally new country, much forest and jungle, where he suffered from hunger and attacks from the natives for several days. A fight resulted in the loss of twenty-one of his followers.

His two white companions, Edward Pocock and Frederick Barker, succumbed to the fever. With his diminished force Stanley made a close survey of the great lake, Victoria Nyanza.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 27.—Coin has been pouring into the Bank of California rapidly to-day, in payment of the assessment of twenty per cent. on the guarantee fund levied by the syndicate on Saturday. About $600,000 were paid in during the day.

The committees of the Stock Boards have decided to recommend that both boards resume business on the first Tuesday in October, the banks of California and Nevada being expected to open on Monday.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, Sept. 22.—The Correspondencia of this city says that Cardinal Simeoni, the papal nuncio, addressed a note to the late government, demanding the execution of the concordat between Spain and the Vatican, the payment of arrears due to the clergy, and that the nominations to the still vacant bishoprics be made as soon as possible. Don Alejandro Castro, the then minister of foreign affairs, and Don Pedro Salavernia, the minister of finance, replied. The reply was couched in conciliatory but firm language. The ministers endeavored to convince the nuncio that the circumstances of the case no longer permitted him to put forward his demands.

LONDON, Sept. 27.—Weather tempestuous. Some damage done to shipping.

The Germanic proceeded to Liverpool without stopping at Queenstown, on account of the heavy sea.

The Mary Reynolds is wrecked at Carnarvon. Her crew of six were drowned.

The steamer Adler collided with the Swedish steamer King Oscar, on the second, near Grimsley. The King Oscar sunk. Fourteen persons aboard were drowned.

From the Work.

CASTOR CIRCUIT, LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: According to previous notice our camp meeting began on the night of the eighteenth of August, and closed on the twenty-fourth. Our presiding elder, J. A. Miller, and the Revs. H. O. White, J. Lane Borden, J. F. Wynn, G. Jackson, R. Parvin, J. W. McKee and A. E. Clay, with a number of our local brethren, were present and rendered valuable service.

God was in our midst from the commencement, and continued to manifest his power to save throughout the meeting. Seldom do we hear such shouts of victory as went up to heaven during the dark hours of the night. Said one: "I never want to leave this tent." We report thirty conversions as far as ascertained, and twenty-two connected themselves with the church. All returned greatly blessed, and believing more than ever before in camp meetings and Methodism in earnest.

During the year we have held five protracted services, resulting in many conversions and in reviving the members; have also added to our number one hundred and one members, all of whom, we pray, may be saved eternally. We hope to be able to report Castor circuit a living work at the next Conference.

F. G. HOCUTT.

BROOKLINE, LA., September 9, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: Again, through the columns of your paper, I ask the indulgence of a few lines regarding the religious interest of our church.

We have suffered greatly on account of our religious coldness, but the sun of righteousness is again dawning upon us. Bro. Bolt, a local preacher, began a series of meetings at New Salem church, three and a half or four miles north of Girard station, on the twelfth, and closed on the sixteenth instant, in which he was assisted by Bros. Alexander and Monhollen, both of this Conference. There were eight accessions to the church and a number of conversions. One child was consecrated to our Lord and Master. May the Lord sustain and uphold us by his unceasing counsel, and carry on this great work until Christ becomes the author and finisher of our faith.

A YOUNG GIRL, whose father is a fisherman, was asked if she knew the names of the seasons of the year. The girl readily replied: "Yes, there are four—the mackerel season, the whiting season, the herring season and the trawling season."

Memorial Service for Rev. John Wilkinson.

On Sabbath evening, August 22, the Shreveport District Conference met in memorial session, at four o'clock P. M., according to resolution. A vast congregation of the citizens and churches of Keachie were present, manifesting the heartiest interest and deepest sympathy. Rev. R. H. Adair opened the exercises by reading Bro. Wilkinson's favorite ninety-first psalm. After singing

"Servant of God, well done,
Rest from thy loved employ,"

and prayer, President Thomas L. Armstrong, of Mansfield Female College, was called to preside, and at once explained the purpose of the meeting. He called on the members to speak at once, and alluded to the nature of the occasion in a beautiful and impressive manner. Revs. Robert Randle, A. E. Goodwyn, R. H. Adair and William D. Stayton spoke in the order of their names. During this short hour years beyond the flood crowded back again, filled with thrilling reminiscences, and endeared by the sweetest associations and the hallest memories. In this very house we had heard the voice of John Wilkinson as he stood up among us three years ago, a man among men, honored and loved as few men ever are. And three years from now who of us will be with him in the sun-bright climes of endless life? Thus death makes havoc in the ranks. The valiant fall, but the battle rages more fiercely. The workmen die, but the work goes on. After the speeches "The Land of Beulah" was sung. As we sang

"O come, angel bands, Bear me away on your snowy wings," we thought of the rapturous flight of the soul whom Jesus loved on earth and claims in heaven. After an earnest prayer by Rev. S. S. Scott the benediction was pronounced by Rev. John Pipes, and the vast congregation dispersed, doubtless filled with hope for a better life.

The following preamble and resolutions were unanimously passed by a rising vote of the Shreveport District Conference, August 21, at Keachie, La.:

Whereas, It has pleased the great Head of the church to call from labor to his eternal rest and reward the soul of our dear friend and beloved brother, John Wilkinson; And whereas, He was for four years one of the most active, useful, faithful and influential members of the Shreveport district, having endeared himself to all the preachers and to thousands of the people of this part of the State; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we submit with reverence and humility to this strange dispensation of God's providence in depriving the church of one of its most useful and accomplished ministers, and his family of its stay and support, we mourn the loss of our friend and brother as one very near to our hearts.

Resolved, That the hour of four o'clock P. M. on Sabbath evening be set apart as a time of memorial service commemorative of his distinguished character, his illustrious example, and his eminent virtues as a man and as a minister of Jesus, and that we respectfully invite the church and the public to be present, and to mingle their sympathy and sorrow with ours.

Resolved, That we offer our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved widow and the children of our brother, and that we make especial prayer for them.

Resolved, That the secretary be directed to furnish Sister Wilkinson with an account of the memorial services, and that he forward the same, with a copy of these resolutions, to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

CENTENNIAL BELL AND CANNON. Meneely & Kimberly, of this city (Troy, N. Y.,) who are making a bell of 13,000 pounds for the tower of old Independence Hall in Philadelphia, have, upon application to Gen. Hagner and upon indorsement of the War Department, received permission to select several cannon from those now in store at the Watervliet arsenal, to be cast in the bell. This selection will be of cannon which did service in the Union and Confederate armies during the late civil war. It is the purpose of the donor of the bell (Henry Seybert, of Philadelphia,) and of the authorities of that city, to have the bell in position in Independence Hall tower, July 4, 1876. It will thus have both a national and centennial significance—that of a country grown in a century from a union of 13 States to 38, and a population increased from 4,000,000 to 40,000,000. The object of the special cannon used in the casting of this bell will be to carry out the idea of peace, in the blending of North and South, and quite in keeping with the spirit of one of the Bible inscriptions which will be cast upon the bell: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."—Troy Daily Times.

Overlooked.

Under this heading the Southern Christian Advocate calls attention to a matter of importance, as follows:

At the last session of the General Conference an addition was made to the disciplinary directions concerning local preachers, which we have reason to believe has in very many places been overlooked by presiding elders and by the brethren conferred. The addition will be found at the close of the first item of answer to question 4, section 11 of the latest edition of the Discipline, and is in these words: "And they shall report in writing the extent and result of these labors to the fourth Quarterly Conference."

This addition contributes but little to the enlargement of the Book of Discipline, but a faithful observance of the requirement it enjoins will, we feel sure, promote the efficiency of a very important arm of service in the operations of the church. As things go, next to nothing is known of the measure of service rendered by a large proportion of those intrusted with credentials as local preachers. In the immediate vicinity of their homes, what they do, and how they do it, may be known, but the information of the church at large throughout the charge does not transcend the bare fact that they are authorized preachers of the gospel. Now the amendment of the Discipline to which we are calling attention provides for a report of every preacher's work, so that the entire charge, through its official body, may have specific information as to the faithfulness or inefficiency of each man for whose commission as an embassador of Christ it is responsible. This is desirable, and it is eminently proper. It will tend to a juster appreciation of the value to the church of the services of the faithful; while it will have the effect of designating conspicuously, and gradually dropping from the rolls, such as are only preachers in name, without performing the service which the title imports.

There are many zealous and devoted men in the local ranks, who fill up the full measure of their opportunities, and who are invaluable to the church. It is due these noble laborers in the vineyard that a record of their services should be made; and the fact that provision is made for such record, and corresponding recognition of their labors, will furnish the encouragement to which they are entitled, and by which they will be sensibly helped in their gratuitous work. At the same time it is true that there are not a few whose licenses to preach are renewed from year to year, who only at rare intervals, and where it requires no sacrifice, exercise the right thus conferred. The requirement embodied in the amendment under consideration will operate as a stimulus to such; and the knowledge that toward the close of the year they will be called upon to report upon their labors will in most cases impel to such activity as will prevent that report from being a mere blank. Or, if there be any so incorrigibly recreant to duty and self-respect as to prove insensible to this incentive, it will diminish the embarrassment of ridding the position of so unworthy an incumbent.

The local ministry labor without pecuniary compensation, except when employed in the regular work. Supporting themselves and those dependent upon them by some secular pursuit, they cannot be expected to sacrifice the claims of their business in order to serve the church in the exercise of their ministerial office. It is unreasonable, therefore, to expect these brethren to labor continuously in protracted meetings, to the neglect of their daily pursuits, and it is unjust to censure them for declining to do so. But in applying for the office they profess to be moved by the Holy Ghost to preach the gospel, and therefore are reasonably expected to perform as much of such work as is consistent with a due regard for the claims of their secular employment. Many do this, and more; others make little or no use of their credentials. It is due to the church that it should be regularly informed as to the amount and quality of the service rendered by its local ministry, and we hope, therefore, that these reports will be prepared by the preachers and called for by the presiding elders.

WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.—The third International Conference of the Women's Christian Association will be held in the city of Pittsburg, October 12–15, 1875.

The associations of the United States, Canada and Europe are all invited to send delegates to the meeting.

Places of entertainment will be provided for the delegates, and arrangements have been made with the railroads from St. Louis, Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and intermediate points for excursion fares.

In order that the delegates may avail themselves of these privileges their names must be sent, before the first of October, to Mrs. M. H. Magoffin, No. 1 Montgomery avenue, Allegheny.

THE special election held in New Jersey to vote on the amendments to the State constitution, designed to prevent the appropriation of public funds to sectarian purposes, resulted in sustaining the amendments by a majority of twenty-five thousand.

The Dedication of Our New Church in the City of Mexico.

We find in the Two Republics, a newspaper published in the city of Mexico, the following notice of the dedicatory services, August 22. We are glad to know that the church is ready for use, but more delighted still to know that we now have a living minister ready to speak from its pulpit, in words which can be understood by the people.

D. C. KELLEY.

"The dedication services of the recently completed Southern Methodist church took place, according to announcement, on Sunday, August 22, at three P. M. There were about four hundred persons present, and perhaps half as many more came, but found it impossible to get in. This large audience was composed principally of Mexicans, many of whom belong to the better classes of society, but there were also to be seen many of the English-speaking foreigners of this capital.

"The dedication sermon was preached by the Rev. Santiago Pasco, of Toluca, who was assisted in the services by the Rev. Sosteues Juarez and the Rev. J. C. Mota. The sermon was followed by a brilliant discourse by Mr. M. M. Corella, in which he said it was not his intention to attack Catholicism, or to defend Protestantism, but merely to make manifest the necessity for a pure religion; among other points made and sustained by Mr. Corella was that it is impossible for a nation to exist without a religion.

"The act of dedication was performed (in Spanish) by the Rev. Joel T. Daves, superintendent of the Southern Methodist mission in Mexico, after which the congregation was dismissed. The same evening there was a service in the same place, when Mr. Daves preached his first sermon in Spanish, and acquitted himself most admirably.

"This is an elegant church, which, being built on the American plan, is in striking contrast with the others of this city. The lot was purchased by Bishop Keener during that gentleman's first visit to this country, and the present building has been constructed under the immediate superintendence of Mr. Daves.

"Connected with the church is a free school for boys and girls, for the management of which the services of competent teachers have been secured."

PROGRESS OF BIBLE REVISION.—A recent foreign letter states that the four gospels have been completely revised, except two points in dispute yet to be decided. The Acts and small Epistles have been revised once, and had to undergo a second revision. The Epistles of Paul come next, and will take a long time. The revisers, who number twenty, meet for a week once a month during ten months in the year. They have been thus engaged five years, and their work will take them five years longer. Only the traveling expenses of the revisers are paid, from a fund formed by a sale of copyright to the University Press. There can be no doubt that the revision in question will, on the whole, be found a great improvement—here improving the expressions, and there bringing out the meaning more clearly.

A CURIOUS instance of the ignorance that exists in the North respecting the South, says the Christian Observer, is afforded by the New York Evangelist. Mentioning the lecturers of the coming lecture season, it says: "Bishop Haven on the New South must be worth hearing." A parallel would be afforded if we were to write: "Mrs. Woodhull on the Social Life, or Boss Tweed on the Politics of New York City, must be worth hearing." Bishop Haven has not lived in the South as long as Mrs. Woodhull has lived in New York. Both are so completely carried away by their hobbies as to be blind to realities. With such teachers as Bishop Haven it is not strange that the Northern people should completely misunderstand the South.

THE Philadelphia Press, in an article on the Mississippi troubles, says that the administration of Gov. Ames, a carpet-bagger and political adventurer, has done much to disorganize society and teach general contempt for all authority in that State. The disorder, says the writer, is palpably the result of a corrupt and powerless government, that has taught its ignorant negro dependents that they were above the law in a struggle with the whites, and they have made the common mistake of taking the leaders at their word. Until carpet-bag rule is completely overthrown there can be no peace, safety and prosperity in the reconstructed States.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.—On Sunday, October 3, Bishop Doggett will preach in the University chapel at ten A. M., and Bishop Wightman at three P. M. Other Bishops and ministers are expected to take part in the dedication service.

On Monday, October 4, at ten A. M., the formal inauguration of the university will take place. Addresses are to be delivered by his excellency James D. Porter, Governor of Tennessee; the Rev. Dr. Deems, pastor of the Church of the Strangers, New York; the Rev. Dr. A. A. Lipscomb, late chancellor of the University of Georgia. The official induction of the chancellor and faculties of the university will then take place.

CHARACTER is the diamond that scratches every other stone.

COLORED METHODISTS.—We see, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, a tendency among the several colored Methodist connections to unite in one body. If pragmatical politicians will keep their hands off, and let our colored friends correspond on the subject without prejudice, we see not why they may not unite in one great connection—upon the non-political platform of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. Our colored members, with their church property, have generally gone into that organization with our blessing; those of the Northern Methodist Episcopal Church ought to do the same, and let the others follow as soon as they can see their way clear to do so. The Christian Index, the organ of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America, in its issue for September, says:

"The colored Methodists of America, united in one grand church, fraternizing with white Methodism, would be able to withstand all the approaches of sin, and the better prepared to impart religious instruction to the famishing thousands who now are perishing for want of suitable religious nutriment. We are for fraternity—we are for organic union with all colored Methodists, and will hail with delight any plan that will complete this object. We are for organic union because we think it is right—because we will be made better and stronger by the union. Organic union will lessen strife, destroy prejudice, raise up and elevate fallen humanity. We are for organic union because we think it is God's will that his people should be united, of one heart and mind, working together for the good of all. The question is before us. Shall we have one colored Methodism? God grant that we may. Fraternity is good—organic union is better."

FRATERNITY AND COLOR.—Dr. Poisal, of the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, is an ardent champion of unconditional fraternity with the Methodist Episcopal Church (North.) We want to see fraternization inaugurated on proper principles; but we think our brother is intemperate in his advocacy of the cause of which he makes himself a champion. It seems that he was present, some days since, at a camp meeting held at New Freedom, in Pennsylvania. At services conducted by Mrs. Van Cott he addressed himself to Bishop Wayman, of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, who was seated in the stand. Dr. Poisal, grasping him by the hand, said: "My dear brother, I could clasp you to my bosom, though you are a black man; yet, blessed be God, there is a time coming when you and these brethren and I shall be white—yes, whiter than the beautiful snow."

This idea of clasping a black man to the bosom will, no doubt, be quite pleasing to Bishop Haven; but what will the distinguished admirer of brown and black think of the suggestion that in getting to heaven men of color will be divested of color? It seems to us that if Bishop Haven should get to the good world, and find nobody but white folks, he would pronounce it a "rebel hole," and take the back track to Africa.—Holston Methodist.

DEATH OF AN IRISH WESLEYAN MINISTER.—Rev. John Armstrong, for sixty years a devoted and useful minister of the Irish Wesleyan Methodist Conference, died in Lurgan, Ireland, in August last, aged nearly eighty-seven years. He was ready for his departure. Just before he passed away he said to his companion: "If this is death it is very easy." To a ministerial friend he said: "My hope is in the blood. O precious blood! O precious Redeemer!" It was Sabbath morning, and as his friend left him he inquired: "Where are you going?" "To the service," was the response. "Right," said the dying patriarch; "right. Give them my love, and tell them to give their hearts to the Lord."—New York Christian Advocate.

MEXICO.—Last week, says the Northern Christian Advocate, we recorded the expression of fraternal feeling among Protestant missionaries in Japan. Now we hear of what is styled "a wonder in Mexico." Our correspondent speaks of "a protracted union meeting in the city of Mexico held by the Episcopal (!) Congregational, Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist missionaries. They meet together for prayer and conference in the forenoon, and in the afternoon they all gather in one of the churches for preaching, addresses, prayer and praise!

PROF. W. LEROY BROUN.—The chair of mathematics in the Vanderbilt University, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, has been filled by the election of Prof. W. Leroy Broun, of the University of Georgia. The trustees have waited long in order to secure a man of first-rate abilities, who has had experience and made character in this department. Such a man is Prof. Broun. He has signified his acceptance of the position, and is expected to be in Nashville before the university opens.

WE SEE it stated that Miss Berenice Morrison, a young lady of wealth, of Howard county, Mo., has donated $100,000 to Pritchett Institute, belonging to our church, located at Glasgow, Mo.

REV. JOHN W. OVERTON, father of Rev. J. M. Overton, of the Pacific Conference, died at his home, near Santa Rosa, August 30, 1875.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1875.

"BEFORE THE LEAVES FALL."

I wonder if oak and maple,
Willow and elm and all,
Are stirred at heart by the coming
Of the day their leaves must fall?
Do they think of the yellow whirlwind,
Or of the crimson spray,
That shall be when chill November
Bears all the leaves away?

"If die we must," the leaflets
Seem one by one to say,
"We will wear the colors of all the earth
Until we pass away.
No eye shall see us falter;
And before we lay it down,
We'll wear in the sight of all the earth
The year's most kingly crown."

So trees of the stately forest,
And trees by the trodden way,
You are kindling into glory
This soft autumnal day.
And we who gaze remember
That more than all they lost,
To hearts and trees together,
May come through ripening frost.

Dr. Bledsoe's Logic in Theology.

MR. EDITOR: In your notice of the July number of the Southern Review, in the ADVOCATE of September 2, you say the article on "The Idea of God, or Logic in Theology," strikes you as being very nearly New School Calvinism. You say further: "Certainly it is not in accord with Wesleyan doctrine, especially on the subject of reprobation and perseverance." This article, as you say, "has been largely and adversely criticised by the Southern Methodist press," and, I may add, in some instances very unjustly criticised.

Now I am not set for the defense of Dr. Bledsoe or the Southern Review, as he is fully able to take care of himself and the Review too. But I am set for the defense of the truth, and I conceive that article to be true; at least it has been a great help to me, and, as far as I understand the matters discussed, it is in accord with Wesleyan doctrine. How it could strike you as being very nearly New School Calvinism or any other kind of Calvinism I confess I am unable to see.

Now on the Calvinistic question Dr. Bledsoe does exactly what Mr. Wesley did on the question of imputed righteousness—that is, rather than contend about words he agrees to the terms used, provided they are used according to his understanding of them. That is to say, Dr. Bledsoe mentions that the final result in any given case will not be different from what God foresaw that it would be; hence, so far as the fact is concerned, it matters little whether we say: "God foreknew it or God decreed it." The result is the same in either case. He says, page 30: "The event only teaches that some are saved and that some are lost"—that is, the event teaches us nothing as to why some are saved and others lost. "But," says Dr. Bledsoe, "the word tells us that some are saved, because they co-operate with the grace of God which is given unto them, and others are lost because they do despite to the Spirit and refuse to obey his voice." He says further: "This is the ground or reason of election; for God knew from all eternity who would thus yield a willing obedience and live, and those, on the other hand, who would reject his grace and perish." Now is this New School Calvinism? or wherein does it fail to accord with Wesleyan doctrine? But you say Dr. Bledsoe is not in accord with Wesleyan doctrine, "especially on the subject of reprobation and perseverance." On the subject of reprobation Dr. Bledsoe says: "The utter impossibility of the salvation of others, in consequence of their rebellious will, was the cause of their non-election." Is this Wesleyan doctrine? But you may say as some who have criticised this article have said. But Dr. Bledsoe says: "The grace of God is not given to all men with a view to their salvation." This does not sound like Wesleyan doctrine. I grant that; but is it true? Let us see. If God foresaw from all eternity that it would be an utter impossibility to save some in consequence of a rebellious will, then why should God bestow his grace with a view of doing an impossible thing? To assert the first and deny the last is equivalent to saying that God attempts to work impossibilities. You see Dr. Bledsoe makes use of logic in theology.

On the subject of perseverance Dr. Bledsoe says: "We agree with them (the Calvinists) in regard to the perseverance of the elect." Now to Wesleyan ears that is un-Wesleyan indeed. But hold—the doctor says further: "If God elected only those who he foresaw would obey and live," then "their perseverance is contained in the very ground and reason of their election." We turn back and see that the ground and reason of election is the foresight of a willing obedience on the part of the elect: "They co-operate with the grace of God which is given unto them."

Now all this does not preclude the possibility of God's having foreseen that some would co-operate with that grace at one period of life, and afterward refuse such co-operation. The final facts in each case were known to God, and known in such sense that no one whom he foresaw as lost will ever be saved, and no one whom he foresaw as saved will ever be lost. This may not be Wesleyan, but it is true. It is just as impossible that there should be any mistakes in the knowledge of God as that there should be any failure in the decree of God. So that, so far as the results are concerned, it matters little whether we believe in decrees or foreknowledge. The final results will be the same in either case. The Calvinist says: "The reprobate is lost because God decreed it." Dr. Bledsoe says: "The reprobate is lost because God could not help it." If it had been barely possible for the reprobate to have been saved, then God would have given his grace with a view to his salvation.

The article in the Review has done me good. As far as I understand it it is true. There is no New School Calvinism in it. It does not antagonize Wesleyan doctrine. So I think.

R. G. PORTER.

BROOKSVILLE, Miss., Sept. 9, 1875.

(NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We referred to the New School because we supposed that this class was nearly in accord with Dr. Bledsoe in reference to the ground of election. In this we may be mistaken, although the journals which represent this school at present seem to approach very nearly to Arminianism. A predestination based upon the foresight of faith and obedience is in accord with our Methodist standards. In this, which is the main thing, Dr. Bledsoe seems to be in harmony with Watson and Wesley. If, however, we read Watson on the subject of election, the choosing of a set or determinate number of men who cannot be increased or diminished, and as this subject bears on the doctrine of perseverance, and also in reference to the extent and end of the bestowal of grace upon the finally impenitent, we shall find an apparently wide divergence between him and Dr. Bledsoe. Dr. Bledsoe may be right and Watson wrong. At any rate, we admire Dr. Bledsoe's candor and independence in thinking for himself, and in announcing the conclusions which his convictions of truth demand. Dr. Bledsoe says: "If this view be correct, we are, in several respects, much nearer to our Calvinistic brethren than are most other Arminians." This is candid and true, and among the "most other Arminians" we suppose Watson, Wesley and Fletcher are included. The passage in the eighth of Romans is the text of a sermon by Mr. Wesley, and Mr. Watson expounds it at large in the Institutes. Dr. Bledsoe expounds it also, and in his exposition we think he is, in several respects, nearer to our Calvinistic brethren than Watson or Wesley. Our Wesleyan authors were fallible men, and our accepted standards are open to criticism and review. Truth should be our aim, and our correspondent is perfectly right in asserting his loyalty to the truth. We owe much to Dr. Bledsoe for his able vindication of Arminianism, and for his skillful exposure of Calvinistic error. What we said in reference to the article on Logic in Theology could not be regarded as offensive, and we suspect was about what Dr. Bledsoe himself admits.)

Diversities of Operations.

MR. EDITOR: As the subject of Christian experience is being discussed in the ADVOCATE, I wish to lay before your readers a few thoughts, though not in the spirit of controversy. One hundred years ago, when Methodism was being planted in America, conviction of sin was so powerful as to overwhelm whole audiences, or, as Dr. Pierce or Father Boehm would express it: "They were taken with the falling sensation." These pungent convictions produced such anguish and agony, such a wrestling with God, that the transition to a state of peace could never be forgotten. But, while we do not see men falling under a sense of guilt and condemnation, as in the days of primitive Methodism, the fact cannot be denied that never before were the churches possessed of so many Christians of so high a type of purity, and never did Christian emotion so co-operate with Christian activity as at the present time. The conversions of our fathers exhibited the power of converting grace to a degree unknown since apostolic days. Now, since their convictions were so pungent, breaking up the deep-seated affections of the heart, and their conversions attended with such bright manifestations, why was not a much higher type of Christian character produced than at the present time, when these divine manifestations are displayed in a less degree?

"There are diversities of operations, but it is the same God that worketh all in all." Here is the solution. We believe that the Methodist Church has as faithful witnesses for Jesus today as it has ever had. But the times and the state of society are only some of the elements that produce these diversities. It also depends upon the constitutional structure of the mind. In every revival of religion we observe that some develop religious sensibility in one degree, others in another degree, and the contrast between extreme cases is so great that it would seem that only one could be right and the other must be wrong. Hence persons who seem to think that everybody else has a mental organism just like their own, decry all religious emotions that gush over; while others insist that none have religion who do not glide into the kingdom as easily, as ethereally as the birth of a cloud which a breath brings and a breath dispels. It is urged by some that in conviction and conversion there are certain well-defined characteristics given to all, and men must therefore be subjected to certain tests. But when you insist that conversion must accord with certain patterns, deduced from experiences influenced by varying trains of circumstances, you refuse to allow God his sovereignty in the work. God of his own good pleasure works in all, but in diverse ways.

It is easy to see that no two experiences are exactly alike. Men who are susceptible of religious impressions, apprehensive of truth, sincere in all their motives, will be sufficiently convicted by gentle means; while men who are lethargic in disposition, slow of thought, inflexible in their emotions, will require the most potent energy of the gospel to awaken them. One man will reason about it, while another has too much emotion to reason at all. One has imagination so keenly developed as to have quick conceptions of right and wrong, of time with its responsibilities, and heaven with its realities; another has imagination so sparingly cultivated as to perceive very slowly.

Again, age is an important element in producing this diversity. The child cannot be convicted with any such sense of guilt as that which burdens the conscience of the adult. If you say to a man, "You must be very sorry for Adam's sin," he will not understand you. A man can have godly sorrow for nope but personal sins. If you say to the child that has not developed the passions into life dispositions, "You are a great sinner; your transgressions stain your soul so as to shut out the light of heaven," the child will look at you in profound amazement. Its sensibility can be affected, and it may be taught to give its heart to God; but a manly experience that requires actuality can never be developed out of a child that has had almost no life of accountability.

Spring comes in this case without any freshets and storms, simply because no winter preceded. If the child brings to-day's spring buds, do not ask where and when they grew. Let the flower itself be the evidence of its genuineness.

The depth and character of a man's conviction will also depend upon the theology preached, the history of a man's life, and the nature and extent of his sins. When circumstances are so various, mental disposition and culture so diverse, Christian experiences must differ. Paul's differs from John's, Abraham's from Jacob's. Let this be better understood by the Christian world, and we will have less torturing doubt where there is no need of doubt. An honest Christian, who is trying to get to heaven, hears another tell how the Spirit struck him with conviction, like "the rushing, mighty wind," like an earthquake, breaking up the foundations of things, and he begins to doubt that he was ever converted at all.

Last night as we were leaving a glorious revival, almost everybody happy, a good brother said to me: "I don't know what is the matter with me. I enjoy religion in my family, at my daily avocation; I enjoyed as much religion last Christmas, while settling with my hands, as I ever do; but I cannot enjoy religion like these people to-night." This man's disposition is so even and tranquil, his communion with God so constant, that, notwithstanding his daughter had just been converted and was rejoicing in her first love to Jesus, his emotional nature was unruffled.

Conversions are genuine whether they come in the storm or in the calm. The point is this: "Ye must be born again." There must be a new arrangement, a change in the heart that shifts the affections, the spiritual nature so vitalized as to control the physical. This is the effect, and it matters not whether the effect is produced by deep or little feeling. It matters not whether we know precisely the moment of regeneration. All that we desire is the witness of the Spirit, and that fruit which only the good tree can produce.

H. M. MOSS.

OBITUARIES.

REV. HIRAM ENLOW departed this life July 9, A. D. 1875, having lived almost threescore and ten years.

The statistics of his life which have been furnished me are a little deranged, and may probably be somewhat inaccurate. From these it appears he was born in Hardin county, Ky., in the year A. D. 1808. His mother emigrated with her parents to this country when he was about nine months old, and landed on the east bank of the Mississippi river, in Adams county, where he was reared to manhood. There being no schools, churches, teachers nor ministers of the gospel in this country at that time, he was brought up almost entirely without an education or religious privileges; nor did he ever hear a gospel sermon until he was about twenty years of age. Shortly after this he made a visit to the hill country in Wilkinson county, where he made the acquaintance of a young lady by the name of Nancy Enlow, to whom he became united in marriage on the first day of August, 1830. (She preceded him, a few weeks since, to her home in heaven.) A little over two years after their marriage he and his wife became members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which they lived consistent, humble and truly pious Christians until their transfer to the church triumphant.

Bro. Enlow truly lived up to the full stature of a man in Christ Jesus, according to the Scriptures. He was certainly a peculiar man, zealous of good works, and "in all things feared God and kept his commandments." On the fourteenth of May, A. D. 1834, he was appointed class-leader. In that capacity he served the church with much acceptability until the twenty-sixth of August, 1837, at which time he asked for license to exhort under the ministrations of Rev. W. H. Watkins. He was licensed to preach October 27, 1849; ordained deacon November 12, 1854, by Bishop Early; ordained elder December 12, 1858, by Bishop Paine. Bro. Enlow certainly was one of the best men I ever knew. He was great in goodness. His example and precept were always on the right side. No man at this age of the world can fill his place in the sphere of his acquaintance in this region of country. He married the young people, he baptized their children, he buried their dead, he preached their funerals; in a word, he was called upon to officiate in every good thing. He has left eight children to mourn their loss. Five have preceded him to the better land, and we have reason to believe the eight remaining are on their way to rejoin them in the home of the godly. And in the great day, when the Lord comes to make up his jewels, it will be said of many souls that they were brought to Christ and saved through the ministry of Hiram Enlow. His visits among the people, to counsel and pray with them, were often seasons of refreshment to those who loved the Lord. He was a great advocate of prayer and class meetings, took much delight in love-feasts, and believed in keeping up all the social meetings of our beloved Zion. He discouraged, on all occasions, instrumental music in the house of the Lord, believing it best to praise God with the human voice. He kept up family prayer night and morning; and when he became too feeble to get out of his chair and kneel down he would sit upon his seat and call his family around him, read to them the word of God, and devoutly ask God's blessing, care and protection upon them. He inquired for the old paths, and preferred to walk in them. He was faithful in filling all his appointments, and punctual in beginning at the time appointed. He was so particular about everything that might affect the character of a Christian and the usefulness of a minister that he won in some places the cognomen of "Old Straight Jacket." What an honor in such a crooked and perverse generation! He was a firm believer in all the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the plan of carrying the gospel to the poor by our great system of itineracy. Lastly, he requested of his family, when they saw he was dying, to unite in singing that beautiful song, commencing:

"O sing to me of heaven
When I am called to die," etc.

Thus passed away this godly man, who died as he lived.

WM. FINN.

Bro. Hiram Enlow was a member of the Quarterly Conference of the Buffalo circuit. The following resolutions were adopted by this Conference:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God, in his wise providence, to remove our venerable and beloved brother, Rev. Hiram Enlow, from his sphere of labor to his home above; therefore,

Resolved, By the Quarterly Conference of the Buffalo circuit of the Mississippi Annual Conference, that in the death of Bro. Enlow the church on earth has lost a faithful minister and an exemplary member.

Resolved, That we will try to emulate his example of faithfulness and good works.

Resolved, That we sympathize with his bereaved children, and pray God to grant them sustaining grace in this time of need.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication, and also that a copy be filed with the archives of this circuit.

Adopted by the Quarterly Conference held at Percy's Creek, September 11, A. D. 1875. WM. FINN.

REV. A. STACY DOUGLAS, son of Rev. John H. and Elizabeth Douglas, was born in Cumberland county, N. C., May 23, 1849. While a child his parents moved to Barbour county, Ala. By the example and instructions of his parents he was deeply impressed with the purity of Christianity while yet a boy. Consequently in early life he believed in and embraced Jesus Christ as his personal and actual Savior, and connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Naturally he was one of the best and purest boys I ever knew. He possessed an even temper, a trusting heart, sweet spirit and prudent tongue. He was rarely ever overtaken by or led into a folly or sin. He was endowed with clear perception and sound judgment in matters pertaining to morality. But upon these great qualities of head and heart the Holy Ghost worked so effectually in his regeneration, and in the impartation of the grace of God, as to make him, while in youth, a mature and model Christian.

At the age of fifteen he entered the Orion Institute, Orion, Pike county, Ala., under the instruction of A. E. Eubanks, A. M., and at once took front rank among the pupils of that institution, making great proficiency in the study of mathematics, history, philosophy, Latin and Greek. He continued in this institute two years, and then entered Emory College, Oxford, Ga., in which he continued two years; then entered the East Alabama Male College, Auburn, Ala., in which he graduated with first honors in 1869, delivering the valedictory, part of which was in Latin.

During the year in which he graduated he rendered the church efficient help by conducting prayer meetings. His pure life, mental and moral qualities, so impressed the church in Auburn and the Quarterly Conference that after careful examination he was licensed to preach, and recommended to the Montgomery Conference as a suitable person to enter the traveling connection, and was cordially admitted by the Annual Conference, at Union Springs, Ala., in December, 1869, and appointed to the Heron Street station, Montgomery, for 1870, which charge he served to the satisfaction and profit thereof. In 1871 he was stationed in Camden, Ala., and in 1872 in Marianna, Fla., which appointments he served in great goodness and wisdom. At the close of the year 1872 his health was so precarious, by reason of dyspepsia, that he asked for and was granted a location. He sought relief by various means, but all seemed to be unavailing. Slowly, surely yet calmly he approached the final hour. He felt no alarm at death's dismay. He was ready.

Last March Bro. T. J. Rutledge, while on his Bible mission to Troy, Ala., thinking it might improve the health of our dear, declining Bro. Douglas, took him to his own pleasant and healthy residence in Opelika, Ala. There he received the kindly offices of Bro. Rutledge and family, Bro. W. M. Motley and many others. Although from home, and father and mother, yet Bro. Douglas was in the midst of pious company, and enjoyed the godly counsel and fervent prayers of the ministers and members of the church during his last days and hours. He calmly and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus.

Bro. A. S. Douglas died in Opelika, Ala., April 9, and was buried in Troy, April 11, 1875, Bro. John A. Peterson, pastor, officiating, assisted by Rev. S. P. Richardson, presiding elder.

The death of such a noble young minister of the gospel of Christ has touched hundreds and thousands of loving hearts with sadness and grief. He possessed all the essential qualities of true greatness. But our dear young brother has been called to mansions of eternal light and glory. May we all meet him there.

ANGUS DOWLING.

DIED, at DeSoto, Miss., August 16, FANNIE E., wife of D. Parker, and daughter of Mr. F. E. and Mary Stokes, of Citronelle, Ala., aged sixteen years, eleven months and sixteen days. She became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South January 18, 1874, and was married May 12, 1875. Fannie, as daughter, sister and wife, was gentle, kind and loving, and in all these relations was devotedly loved. She possessed the love of all her acquaintances. As a Christian she was meek, humble and faithful. She was firm and unyielding in her Christian integrity. She would not, for love of God and the church, be drawn into such diversions as God and the church condemn. She impressed me as one of heaven's heroines. She was called away unexpectedly to her friends, and was not in a condition, in her dying moments, to leave those sweet, loving assurances of peace and safety so precious to surviving friends. But a life so pure, so loving, so faithful to God and duty is the best guarantee of a glorious rest. On the eve of her marriage she addressed a note to her Sunday school teacher, expressing the tenderest love and affection to her, strong faith and trust in Jesus, and thanking her for having led her to Christ. Her short but faithful Christian life has closed, and peacefully she awaits the dawn of the resurrection morn, and the "Well done" to be said to the faithful. May the dear ones she has left meet her in that land where there is no death, and where partings are no more.

S. H. C.

REV. JOHN R. SIMMONS was born in Columbus county, N. C., January 14, 1806. In youth he moved to Mississippi, and there (July 24, 1829) was happily married to Miss A. A. Waters, with whom he lived in the full enjoyment of love and confidence till called to the spirit land. In the year 1842 he moved to Alabama, and settled in Pike county. During the year 1846 he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he continued till he joined the church above. He was licensed to preach in 1853. He moved to Holmes county, Fla., in 1867, and moved back to Alabama in 1870, and settled in Coffee county. During the last years of his life he was a great sufferer by reason of continued bodily affliction; but he was a patient and uncomplaining sufferer. He could bear his afflictions by the grace of God, and even rejoice in the prospect of death. The hour of his departure finally came, but it brought no alarm, for he was ready. He called his wife and children to his bed and gave them his final charge and blessing, and then sweetly fell asleep in the arms of his exalted and glorified Savior.

"Servant of God, well done;
Rest from thy loved employ."

A. DOWLING.

DAVID A. ROBERTSON was born in South Carolina on the fourth of August, 1779, and died in Amite county, Miss., June 17, 1875. His parents moved to Mississippi Territory in or about 1810, and settled on Coles Creek, Jefferson county, near where Fayette now stands. In a few years his father died, leaving him and two brothers and several sisters for his mother to raise and provide for. David remained with his mother until her death. He then married Mary, the daughter of Edward Forman. By her he had eight children. She died, leaving him to care for and raise these little ones. In 1833 or 1834 he moved to Amite county, Miss., and settled near Mount Vernon church. He brought his church letter and handed it in, and remained a good and faithful member. How long he had been a member we cannot tell, but think nearly sixty years. He lived a holy life and died a Christian, full of faith and hope.

JAS. D. ROBERTS.

MISS VIRGINIA F. DOGGETT, youngest daughter of Ward T. and Amelia F. Doggett, was born October 22, 1857, joined the church in 1873, and was baptized by Rev. G. M. Liverman. At the Delhi district camp meeting of 1874 she realized the full assurance of God's pardoning love. From that time until her death, which occurred August 28, 1875, she lived an exemplary Christian life. When informed, two days before her death, that she could not recover, she calmly bade farewell to her relations and friends. On the next day she greatly enjoyed a service of prayer and praise conducted by Rev. J. D. Tooms, and expressed a strong desire to go to heaven. She had been, during her whole life, a child of affliction, the peculiar care and solicitude of her parents.

B. F. ALEXANDER.

DIED, June 3, 1875, BENIE BROOKS, infant daughter of W. A. Hedrick and Mary E. Parker.

Christ said: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Died, August 19, 1875, of general congestion, NANNIE WEAKS, third daughter of W. A. Hedrick and Mary E. Parker, aged five years.

Our hearts are sadly bereaved of this little treasure, but we know she nestles now in a loving Savior's arms, safely housed from all the ills of life.

AUNT MAY.

THERE is this difference between thought and emotion: Thought is dead without emotion, whereas emotion has a life of its own entirely independent of thought. Thoughts are but wandering spirits that depend for their vitality upon the magnetic currents of feeling.

AN OLD MAN'S DREAM.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

O for one hour of youthful joy!
Give back my twentieth spring!
I'd rather laugh a bright-haired boy
Than reign a grey-haired king.

Off with the wrinkled spoils of age!
Away with learning's crown!
Tear out life's wisdom-written page,
And cast its trophies down!

One moment let my life-blood stream
From boyhood's fount of flame;
Give me one giddy, reeling dream
Of life and love and fame.

My listening angel heard the prayer,
And, calmly smiling, said:
"If I but touch thy silvered hair
Thy hasty wish had sped.

"But is there nothing in the track
To bid thee fondly stay,
While the swift seasons hurry back
To find the wished-for day?"

Ah, truest soul of woman kind!
Without thee what were life?
One bliss I cannot leave behind—
I'll take my precious wife!

The angel took a sapphire pen,
And wrote in rainbow hue:
"The man would be a boy again,
And be a husband too!

"And is there nothing yet unsaid
Before the change appears?
Remember all their gifts have fled
With those dissolving years!"

"Why, yes, I would one favor more;
My fond paternal joys—
I could not bear to lose them all—
I'll take my girls and boys!"

The smiling angel dropped his pen:
"Why, this will never do;
The man would be a boy again,
And be a father too!"

And so I laughed. My laughter woke
The household with its noise.
I wrote my dream, when morning broke,
To please my fair-haired girls and boys.

The Early Dutch Domines.

In the Rural Gazette of Flatbush a series of very charming articles of much skillful historical research are being given from the graceful pen of Dr. H. L. Bartlett, of that place. From his latest sketch, says the Brooklyn Union, we reproduce the following picture of the early domines of this region:

The Dutch domines were loved and respected by their people, and, we might also add, were feared by them, not with a slavish fear, but with that awe, or rather reverence, which naturally belonged to their holy office. They were educated men, and as such formed a sort of aristocracy. They were the ministers in holy things, and officiated in all the solemn and trying events of life. They were the temporal head of the church, and as such were ever jealous of their prerogatives and demanded courteous attention.

As the early Dutch clergymen, or domines, as they were called, were educated men, in a time when education was a rare exception, they exercised an influence in social and civil affairs, as well as in strictly ecclesiastical matters, hardly to be appreciated in our day and generation. Most of them were graduates of Leyden, or some other equally celebrated European university, and many of them were eminent classical scholars, besides being able to preach in several modern languages.

Domine Drisius is said to have been able to preach with ease and fluency in English, Dutch and French. Several of them became noted as orators, historians and poets, and they were often called upon to assist in the councils of State.

In illustration of the deference they sometimes exacted, a story is told of a celebrated Dutch divine, who was invited to dine with a family of his congregation. The hour for dinner came, but no guest arrived. What was deemed a reasonable time was allowed to pass, till the hostess at last decided that the domine must be unavoidably detained, and ordered on the repast. When the meal was about half concluded the guest put in an appearance, but such was his indignation that they should doubt his word in keeping the appointment, and not have detained the meal, that he turned upon his heels in high dudgeon and bade them "good-day!"

On a certain occasion a minister arrived at his church to find no one there save his foresinger, it being a very stormy day. The sexton suggested that as there was no congregation they should adjourn the services. The domine indignantly replied that he had come there to preach, and preach he would, and that he, the sexton, could go or remain, as he chose. Of course he remained, and performed all the duties of his office, except taking up the collection, which he positively refused to undertake.

Not so in the case of another sexton, under similar circumstances. He stayed till he had turned the hour-glass once, and its sands had nearly run out again, when he interrupted the preacher by saying "that as the time for his dinner had arrived he would be much obliged if the domine would lock the church when he was through, and put the key under the door."

It is said that the genius is ever eccentric. If the converse of this is true, there can be no doubt that the Dutch Church in America has possessed some of the most brilliant geniuses. A small-sized volume could be written on the eccentricities of the Dutch pulpit. A few instances alone must suffice.

Dr. Strong, in his history of Flatbush, relates an amusing incident of Domine Van Sinderen. It would seem that he was in the habit of mixing up the gossip of the village with his Sunday discourses, much to the displeasure of his people. On one occasion he carried this so far that one of his elders arose in his place and publicly censured him for his scandalous practice. As might be expected, the minister was highly offended, and, leaning over the pulpit, he defiantly shook his fist at the elder and wrathfully exclaimed:

"You, Philip Negal, if you can preach the gospel better than I can, come up here and try."

An amusing story is told of this same clergyman on another occasion. The schoolmaster had been catechizing the children, and among other questions was one concerning Noah's ark. Domine Van Sinderen, who had been listening to the exercises, thinking he could illustrate the subject better by a picture, began to delineate said ark on the front of the pulpit with a piece of chalk. The foresinger at once remonstrated against this defacement, and an unseemly scene ensued, which was finally compromised by one of the blackboards used in singing being brought.

The Rev. Isaac P. Labagh, of Gravesend, must have been rather an eccentric man. He was the son of Peter, or, as he was generally called, "Father Labagh," one of the venerable pillars of the Dutch Church in the last century. He was a man of great learning, an independent thinker, and was possessed of considerable wealth. After having preached for several years he became of the opinion that the proper day to be observed as the Sabbath was the seventh instead of the first, and, acting upon this conviction, he preached in a Jewish synagogue on Saturday, and in his own church on Sunday, thus making sure that the right day was observed.

During the American Revolution Van Sinderen, above referred to, and the Rev. Johannes Casparus Rubel were associate pastors of the churches of Kings county, Brooklyn excepted. The former was a warm patriot and Whig, the latter a violent Tory, and, as would naturally be expected under such circumstances, they were always at loggerheads. What made matters still worse, they were both stubborn and self-willed, and Rubel is said to have been in the habit of taking more wine with his dinner than would now be considered orthodox, and at such times did not hesitate, when preaching, to anathematize the rebels (as the Americans were called) and their cause. When spiritually exalted he would gesticulate violently, leaning so far over the pulpit that his elders had expostulated with him, fearing he would lose his balance and fall over. On one occasion, probably after the battle of Long Island, he became so excited that, sure enough, the fears of the elders were realized—over he fell, like Lucifer, over the battlements of the pulpit into the baptistry below.

The wife of a Dutch domine was once deliberately shot by a British soldier, and from thenceforth the minister swore vengeance against the mother country and her myrmidons, and enlisted as chaplain in the patriot army. During the progress of a battle the American soldiers exhausted their supply of wads for their guns, and the chaplain at once set himself at work to supply them. Mounting his steed, he galloped to the nearest church, gathering all the hymn-books he could carry, and rode back to camp. Tearing these into fragments, he distributed them among the soldiers, exclaiming:

"Here, boys, here's music! Send them home, boys, singing Watts!"

In reading their history one is impressed with the feeling that, as a class, they have been a noble, self-sacrificing race of men, and we can truly say of them: "Well done, good and faithful servants."

A Woman's Warning Against Fashion.

Fashion is a much more subtle temptation, because the eye and taste get gradually demoralized. Some periods are worse than others in this respect; but there will always be tendencies to be guarded against—either those that are actually to indecency, or merely to indecorum—e. g., the quietest bonnet of the fashion of 1875 would have been most indecorous in 1830, and could have been worn by no respectable person, though now the "cottage bonnet" would be an enormity. But when, in the beginning of the century, ladies, trying to be classical, wore hardly two petticoats, and backed out of the room like nixies for fear their fathers and aunts should be horrified by the statue-like outline of their torsos, fashion went a good way beyond the simply indecorous. And the same may be said of the height of the corsage, and probably always will be; for some women will unfortunately always be found who are sufficiently lost to modesty to be willing to attract by display of themselves; and there are others who thoughtlessly imitate them, because they will not be outdone; and thus a public fashion is formed, which absorbs the thoughtless, and makes others afraid of the suspicion of prudery. Once for all, exposure is always wrong. Whatever be the fashion, it is a Christian woman's duty to perceive when indecency comes in, and to protest against it by her own example and influence, though not by censoriousness. Relative indecorum should also be guarded against. The first entrance of a fashion that tends to a bold appearance ought to be resisted. Mannish dresses are undesirable on this account; and it is well to cultivate the shading of the face as much as possible—not wearing such hats as are barely endurable because others have them. Exposure of the face is one of the great tendencies of the time; and, though it is not exactly indelicate in itself, yet the bold confronting of notice that is involved in going out with a totally unprotected countenance, thrown into prominence by the head dress, cannot be modified in itself; nor does a veil coming close over the nose materially alter the matter. Crinoline was only absurd, not indecorous, therefore it was not worth while to go against the stream; but the low corsage and tight skirt, and some kinds of head-gear, should be avoided at any cost of singularity. Colors likewise are involved in the matter of modesty. What is obtrusive is never fit to put on, for it brings eyes upon the wearer. There is no need to give instances. Most of us understand that there is a difference between brightness and gaudiness; and if unfortunately we are born without the eye to see what is appropriate, observation from others will generally teach it. To be conspicuous is the special thing to be avoided. Glaring contrasts, hasty adoption of fresh modes—all that challenges observation—are inconsistent with the soberness and "shamefacedness" which form part of the Christian woman's adorning.—Charlotte M. Yonge.

Money and Revivals.

It is said to be a good test of religion, says the Interior, when it converts a man's pocket. Judged by this standard, the revival in Great Britain was a very genuine thing. We had the pleasure of hearing a statement of the methods adopted in London for carrying on their gigantic system of meetings from the lips of Mr. J. Weatherly, a member of the central executive committee. The expenses attending the meetings were very heavy. A committee of leading business men was chosen, to whom was given the entire financial management. These men entered upon their work by consecrating themselves, their time and money to the cause of Christ. They even made out a legal obligation, pledging themselves individually for their share in all the expenses necessary to the thorough carrying out of the revival, no matter what those expenses might be. They also resolved that no collections should be taken in any meeting. The gifts should be the voluntary private offerings of Christians. When asked to what means the committee resorted to extract money from men of the world, Mr. Weatherly replied promptly: "We never asked for a dollar outside of the churches. We did very little asking any way. We committed the whole work to the Lord, and somehow the money came as we needed it." We are hoping for a similar work in this country. The whole-souled devotion of these men to the salvation of souls is worthy of our most earnest thought. They gave themselves to Christ. They kept back no part of the price. They made no careful calculation of the financial risks they were assuming. They laid their time and their fortunes on the altar. They brought their tithes to the storehouse, and wonderfully did God own the offering.

A LEADING PAPER in New York states, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, that there are one hundred thousand confirmed opium-eaters in the United States. We believe there are five times as many. But few people have any idea of the extent to which the use of this fascinating but fatal drug is used. In the humbler ranks of society dram-drinking is working the ruin of thousands; in the higher, opium and its compounds are doing the same work. The ruin of mind and body is certain for the unhappy victim of this habit. Not one in a thousand ever breaks, or really tries to break, its fetters. We pity and loathe the poor Chinese in their horrible opium dens, but if we could collect in one body all the opium-eaters of this land we should see a spectacle more revolting than the human mind ever dreamed of. And, what is worse, many of these persons are professing Christians, who, if they used ardent spirits to excess, would be liable to trial and expulsion for drunkenness; but, as opium-eaters, they go on year by year with faculties more and more stupefied by this deadly drug. There is just as much sin in opium drunkenness as in whisky drunkenness.

THE DUTY OF GIVING.—A liberal Christian merchant, when asked how he could give so liberally to every good object, replied: "Before I was converted I spent liberally for self and world, and at my conversion I solemnly promised to give a fixed proportion of all my income to do good; and every year since I have acted on that promise my business has steadily increased, so that now I can steadily give more and more to him who gives me all."

A Christian who had suffered heavy losses, and to whom his pastor said, "You have lost so much this year that I did not think of calling upon you," replied: "Yes, I have suffered great losses, and must begin to retrench, but retrenchment must not begin at the house of God."

Thornton, the rich and liberal friend of Cowper and John Newton, in similar circumstances, said: "The wealth is not mine, but the Lord's, and it may be he is going to take it out of my hands and give it to another who will be more faithful; and if so I ought to be making good use of what is left;" and he doubled his usual subscription.

DRUNKARDS IN IRELAND.—The latest criminal statistics of Ireland do not give a very favorable impression of the state of the country. The inspectors general of Irish prisons state in their report, just issued, that there was a large increase in the number of criminal prisoners committed during 1874 as compared with the previous year. It appears to be admitted that drunkenness is at the root of this deplorable growth of crime. Since 1867 there has been a steady advance in the number of commitments to county and borough jails for that vice. There were only 6,645 commitments in 1867; they reached 7,034 in 1868, 7,510 in 1869, 8,963 in 1870, 8,409 in 1871, 8,110 in 1872, 9,774 in 1873, and 14,008 in 1874. These figures do not include the committals for drunkenness to bridewells, of which there is a reduction of 5,085 in 1874 as compared with 1867.

OF COURSE.—The town of Batavia, Ill., with three thousand inhabitants, has not a drinking or lager beer saloon, and no place where a dram of spirits can be obtained. It is consequently quiet and thrifty, without a single pauper, and the people are in comfortable circumstances, nearly all owning their houses, living free from debt, and from all the disturbances and annoyances of drunken revelry.

IT IS easy to distinguish those who seek to destroy all that is precious to a Christian soul from those who speak the language of Canaan, though not in our melliflnous sounds. If charity covers many sins, it ought to cover a few errors of interpretation. We should not kill a man because he cannot say Shibboleth as we do.

"I NO HAVEE, how can?" said a Los Angeles Chinaman when asked to pay a debt.

Religious Intelligence.

—A noticeable event in the annual meetings of the Wesleyan Missionary Societies this year was that two of their chairmen contributed $500 each to the funds of the societies. One of them had been twenty-four years a collector for the Wesleyan Missionary Society.

—An estimate has been made of the number of persons that the great cathedrals of the world will hold, with the following results: St. Peter's, 54,000; Milan, 37,000; St. Paul's, London, 25,000; St. Sophia, Constantinople, 23,000; Notre Dame, Paris, 21,000; Pisa, 13,000; St. Mark's, Venice, 7,000.

—Before the founding of the Micronesian mission, in 1855, a series of bloody massacres of ships' crews had taken place on those islands. Since that time, says the Honolulu Friend, nothing of the kind has occurred in the same region, except on one of the northern islands of the Marshall Group, which no missionaries have ever visited.

—At the May meeting of the English Wesleyan Conference the report presented relating to the Wesleyan Methodist training colleges contained some interesting facts. The two colleges are fully occupied and in satisfactory condition. In the Southlands college there were 101 female students, and at Westminster there were 131 students. Statistics from the 906 day schools show that 178,717 pupils' names are on the rolls.

—The Pope, June 21, received several deputations who came to tender congratulations on the occasion of the anniversary of his coronation. The holy father replied that he was greatly consoled in his affliction by the marvelously increasing devotion and affection manifested toward the church throughout the world. In the course of his response he dismissed as not even worthy of mention the rumors of a reconciliation between the holy see and the Italian kingdom.

—The Foreign Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church has appropriated about $510,000 for the expenses of the current year. This with the debt will make nearly $550,000. A severe retrenchment has been necessary. Nearly every missionary structure which had been planned has been cut off, and every chapel and dwelling, with but one exception. Of the small number of missionaries appointed only a portion can be sent. This is the case also with the women who have offered themselves for the service.

—The following appears in one of the ritualistic papers: "Strangers visiting Exeter who hold the Catholic faith cannot do better than attend St. Olave's, where they will find a newly restored church, with seats free and unappropriated, lights and vestments at the celebration, daily even-song (choral on all the principal holy days,) and celebrations on all Sundays and holy days. But they should beware of mistaking it for a church nearly opposite, where the services are of the usual cold Protestant type. The name St. Olave's is over the door."

—It is estimated that there are 148,000 Indians in British America. Of this number 80,000 live in British Columbia, 13,000 in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and 55,000 in Rubert's Land. The mission work among these widely-scattered Indians is carried on by the Roman Catholics, the Wesleyans and the Church Missionary Society. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has a few Indian stations in Canada, and the Moravians continue to care for the remnants of the Delaware tribe at New Fairfield, Canada West. The Church Missionary Society is the principal agent in Christianizing and civilizing the tribes. It has mapped out the territories into four dioceses, and, especially on the Pacific slope, has met with marked success.

—Mr. and Mrs. Edwards, who have taken the place of the lamented Stephens in the Mexican work of the American Board, have finally succeeded in joining Mr. Watkins at Guadalajara. The peril which attended their six days' journey, by diligence, from the city of Mexico, was shown by the fact that on the day after they passed a certain locality on the road the stage-coach was stopped by revolutionists, the names of the passengers demanded, and three of them were shot. At Guadalajara Mr. Edwards found the evidences of a strong and successful work, amid much persecution. In the city and the neighboring villages the gospel truth excites earnest attention. Meetings are full, sacrifices are freely made for the new faith, books eagerly read, and enthusiastic workers raised up. A very promising opening is offered in the large city of Leon, and the advent of more quiet times will give the gospel free course.

—The Christian Instructor gives an interesting account of the manner in which a new church has sprung up in the Osiout district, at Bedari, Egypt. The account is translated from the Arabic, and narrates how the gospel, taken up by a weaver, was carried from one convert to another and from house to house. A deserter from the army secreted in one of the houses takes to reading the Bible and becomes a preacher of the truth. A ruffian hired to break up the meeting leaves the place praising God, and gathers others with him into the services. Converts remain firm under the persecutions of the Coptic authorities. A small plot of ground is donated, which the converts surround with a wall, and roof it over with corn-stalks, to serve as a chapel and a school. While the adversaries are laughing at the corn-stalk booth, collections come in from Protestant brethren, which, with their own contributions, enable them to build a chapel of brick, where they have gathered a school of 50, a congregation of 75, and a communicant membership of 16, without any assistance from a foreign missionary. The United Presbyterian work in Egypt, and especially in the Osiout district, is making healthful progress. The increase by profession during 1874 was 104.

Our Young People.

A RIDDLE.

Who is at the cottage window,
Where the sunbeams sparkle bright,
With his dreamy little child-face
Lost in wonder and delight?

Little Carl, with eyes the bluest,
Ruddy cheeks and tangled hair,
Blowing bubbles, rainbow-tinted,
Floating, quivering in the air.

As he blows another gently,
What within it meets his gaze,
Fixed upon its wondrous beauty
With a look of deep amaze?

What sees he within the bubble,
Which he saw not in the rest?
For the bright eyes dance with pleasure,
And a tremor fills his breast!

'Tis the picture there reflected
Of the meadow newly mown,
And the vineyard and the orchard,
All, one day, to be his own.

This he sees within the bubble,
All of this, and something more;
Little Gretchen—'tis his child-wife—
Coming to the cottage door.

Carl, O Carl! thou'll soon be blowing
Bubbles of still fairer kind—
Glowing visions of the future,
Airy-day-dreams of the mind.

In them, too, will be reflected
This same picture o'er and o'er;
Fields and harvests fair—and Gretchen
Coming to thy cottage door.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 15.

A BEE HUNT CONTINUED, OR PORPOISE TOM, OR HOW PORPOISE TOM CAME TO THRASH THE MAN AT BLUE HILL.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: What is the title of our story? I don't know what to tell Tom to write at the top of this page. Who can tell me what story I was telling when we left off?

"How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest," says Charlie.

No, no, you little rogue you; that won't do. What was it, Harry? Do you recollect?

"Yes, grandpa, you started to tell us about a bee hunt, and then got off on to Porpoise Tom, and were telling about him when mamma came for us to go to bed."

"Yes," says Tom, "but then don't you remember you had just got, grandpa, to where Porpoise Tom was going to tell us how he came to thrash the Blue Hill man?"

I believe you are right, Tom; you generally are. So this will be Porpoise Tom's story, and not mine, you know; and so if it isn't a very good one you must blame him, and not me.

"You see," said Porpoise Tom, "about a week before the Sally Lotus left Castine for the last trip I ever made on her, I went over to Blue Hill to see an old aunt I had living there. The old lady had been right kind to me when I was a lad, and I was afeared lest she hadn't enough money to make her as comfortable as I wanted to see her in her old age, though some folks thought she was rich. She hadn't seen me since I was fourteen years old, when I ran away from her and went to sea. I never shall forget how the old lady looked that morning when I came into the old kitchen where she was getting breakfast before the big fireplace, and told her I was going to sea on the Pauline. Said she: 'Tom, you are an ungrateful boy to desert me in my old age in that fashion, after all I have done for you; and God almighty won't bless you for it;' and then she went on, the good old soul: 'Didn't I sit up nights and nurse you, Tom, when you had the chicken-pox, and the measles, and the whooping cough, and hain't I slaved and worked for you just to give you a chance to go to school and make a man of yourself, and all just because your mother gave you to me when she died; and asked me to take care of you for her. You never heard your mother's story, did you, Tom? Sit down on that stool while I cook these pancakes, and I'll tell it to you, and then see if you can have the heart to go off to sea and leave me all alone.' So I sat down on the stool while she told me

MY MOTHER'S STORY.

"I want you children to remember that this is Porpoise Tom's mother's story, and not mine.—GRANDPA G.)

"'Your mother, Tom, was a French woman, and if there ever was a class of people whom I hated when I was a young girl it was the French; and at one time I think I hated your mother more than any of them, and all just because your father loved her so. Your father and I were twins, Tom, and we had no other brothers and sisters; and when we were little bits of chicks we used to run up and down the beach together, and play in the sand, and bathe in the surf, and sleep in the same little trundle bed, and were just like there hadn't been only one of us. And when we grew so large that they put your father into pants and frocks we still ate our porridge out of the same porringer, and were only happy when we were together. We went to the same common school in the log school-house, and for a long time kept in the same classes; and we used to sit up of long winter nights and do our sums together by the big wood fireplace; but after awhile I saw, Tom, that your father was getting ahead of me, and I wouldn't have cared, because I always knew he was smarter than I was, but I was jealous of everything that sort of kept pushing us apart like. So I would snatch every moment I could get and study as hard as I could, not because I wanted to learn, but because I wanted to keep up with your father. And you see, Tom, your father noticed it, and said he to me one day: "Molly, what's the reason you slip away from me every chance you can get lately, and go off by yourself? Don't you love me as much as you used to?" And I began to cry, and told him all about it; and then, like two silly children that we were, we hugged one another, and declared that we would never love any one else half so well as we would each other. I might have known that a man couldn't keep such a promise as that; but I can say before God, Tom, that I have kept mine to the letter. Well, about this time we had all gone over to yonder island one day for a fishing party, and a tremendous storm came up, so that we had to stay on the island all night. We didn't care much, for we had drawn our boat up into a snug little cove, where we had often staid before, and had a kind of a house built under an immense rock, that was almost a house of itself. Well, that night, while your father and I were sitting in the opening of this house watching the lightning flash in the sky and the sparks dancing in the sea, we heard a gun fire, and shortly after another.

"'My father started up in great terror and exclaimed: "Oh, my God, there is a ship, and she will be certain to get on to those rocks of Deer's Leap;" and he seized a firebrand, and told each of us to take one, and we rushed down to the point, a quarter of a mile or so off, but when we got there it was too late, for by the flashes of lightning we could see a large ship half way out of the water, with her bow way up on the rocks, and we were afeared that every one on board was lost. There was no way we could get out to her to render any assistance to the poor souls on board, and we were the only people on this part of the island; so we could only wait for the vessel to break up, which we knew would not last long the way the sea was breaking over her.

"'Well, before midnight pieces of the wreck came floating to the shore, and we examined all we could reach very carefully, in the hopes that we would find some poor fellow clinging to them; but we never thought about any women being on board, still less children, for we didn't think she was a passenger ship. After awhile a short spar came floating up to the point of rocks just next where we were standing, and by the flashes of lightning father said he could see something on the side of it; so he rushed over and drew it ashore with a long pole, and there, sure enough, Tom, was a child about four years old lashed to the spar, but to all appearances quite dead. Your father and I were just turning ten at the time, and I remember distinctly how beautiful she looked, with her long jet-black hair, and face as white as marble itself.

"'Father undid the cords that bound her to the spar, and commenced to rub her and roll her over and over on his knee; and after a long time, to our great joy, she opened her eyes, and oh! Tom, they were the most beautiful eyes you ever saw. I say it, and there was a time I hated them. But then I have let all those pancakes and that whole kettle of lard burn while talking to you.'"

"Yes, and you, Grandpa Goodale, are keeping these little folks up too late."

Not I. It's Porpoise Tom or Porpoise Tom's old aunt, but not

GRANDPA GOODALE.

From Our Little Friends.

OPELOUSAS, LA., Sept. 10, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see that other little girls write to you, so I thought I would too. I am twelve years old. I go to Sabbath school; I love it so much. I love to read the ADVOCATE; it is so interesting. I am anxious to hear "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." I thought sure we would know it by this time. I think I know—it was Barney drawing honey from the bee-hive. Is that it? Good-by.

Your true friend, FANNIE.

A LITTLE three-year-old in Nashville has sometimes to be threatened with a peach-tree "persuader." The little fellow has come to understand any allusion to the peach-tree, and usually subsides when it is spoken of. A few days ago, since the flowering of the fruit-trees, a slight reference was made to this same tree, when the little fellow made peace for that day by looking up and saying: "Why, mamma, the switches are covered with roses."

AN INDIAN and a white man were passing along a street in an American city, when the former espied a window full of wigs. Pointing to the owner, who was standing in the doorway, he said: "Ugh! Him great man—big brave—take heap scalps?"

On the Rock or on the Sand.

The late disasters on the storm-swept coast of the gulf naturally recall the closing words of the Sermon on the Mount. The peril of building on the sand is manifest. The wreck of homes, the loss of lives, the devastation, are a fearful illustration of the calamities which are sure to overtake those who, in spiritual things, build upon error and sin. It was nobody's fault that Galveston and Indianola were unprepared for the wind and waves. There was no better foundation than the sand on which they were located. Had there been rock in eligible positions the folly of choosing the exposed and unstable sites would be apparent. In religion, however, the true foundation is always set before us, and if men build upon the delusions of error it is because they choose to do so.

All are builders. All have at least their theories of salvation, and all have chosen their foundations. They have taken the gospel for their guide, and Christ for their Savior, or they are resting in false security, trusting in themselves that they are righteous, and strengthening themselves in the sophistries of infidelity. Some are building upon scientific materialism, some upon universalism, others upon their own moral claims, or upon the mere formalities of religious ordinances and profession. Hearing and doing are the elements of safety to the soul. The wise man is he who combines these hemispheres of a perfect life and character, and brings into a rounded whole faith and obedience. The words of Christ are received into the heart, and the entire life is shaped and elevated by them. It would seem that men may be so infatuated as to think that the gospel can save them somehow without renewing the heart, and without bringing the conduct into conformity to its precepts; and that a mere atmosphere of religious sentiment, which does not touch upon practical duties, has in it something of saving effect.

The foolish builders are those who, of set purpose and conviction, are deliberately trusting in a snare, and who, in a refuge of lies, have reached what they regard as safe ground. They are building their hopes upon the wave-washed strand, and amidst the shifting sands which melt in every tide. Edifices are reared which they believe will stand in time, and remain unshaken in the great day. In the troubles and misfortunes of life we have seen these ill-founded supports torn away, and in death we have seen bewildered souls struggling to escape from the wreck of their own follies. How Voltaire illustrated the madness of his infidelity on his death-bed is well known, and how other sinners have lamented, when too late to retrieve their errors, is also well known. The very houses which men build for shelter and refuge float away as chips upon the billows, and, in their fall, crush those who have sought shelter in them. So it is with all who are not on the rock. What they have builded is wrenched away from its base, and the builders themselves are overwhelmed in the ruins. What they conceived to be an impregnable defense proves to be a dead-fall of their own making.

In fair weather the two classes of builders appear much alike. A sand-bar, when the sea is calm and the breeze gentle, seems safe enough. When the blue sky springs its arches from a horizon of unruffled emerald, and when the sails of the ships in the offing flap idly and hang in the bolt-ropes without strain, the Island City looks like a gem too firmly set to be moved. Years of security and prosperity pass, but the cyclone, born in the tropics, comes at last with its heaving billows and roaring breath, and all is changed. It is the storm that tries the foundation of our hopes and tests the genuineness of our faith. In health and prosperity sinners are persuaded of the security they seem to enjoy. It is in sickness, in misfortune and in the face of death that they feel how unsubstantial are the things in which they have trusted. The delusions of many may never be unmasked, even to themselves, until the solemn realities of eternity are revealed. The rich man had a good time in this world. His Sadducean convictions may have been of such an inveterate and blinding nature as to have carried him, unterrified, through the gates of death. The storm struck him on the borders of the other world, and his stronghold of materialism and atheism was shattered not till he lifted up his eyes in hell. So it was with Gibbon, and others like him, who have had no bands in their death. Self deception may be carried to this extreme, and the stupor of sin and error may be so profound as only to yield to the disclosures of eternity. Unbelievers may withstand the warnings and portents of the present life, but there is a cyclone forming whose fury none can resist.

Are men building upon riches and giving themselves up to the worship of mammon? Literally some, figuratively all, are building upon the sand. We see the instability of wealth, and how easily God in his providence can break our idols in pieces. It is better to build upon the rock and to lay up treasure in heaven. The true riches—the riches of grace, the unsearchable riches of Christ—are the only imperishable treasure. Earthly "riches certainly make themselves wings—they fly away as an eagle toward heaven." On the wings of storms and flame and financial convulsions they fly.

Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee.

Our Conference Colleges.

Within the last few years there has been a great exodus of teachers, male and female, from the extreme Southern Conferences to those further north. These gentlemen and ladies doubtless hoped to get into regions where society was more settled, and the rewards of labor more certain, and less taxed to fill the pockets of rapacious and unscrupulous office-holders. We have no word of censure for them, but, on the contrary, rejoice at every measure of success they have had. But for us who are left behind, and intend to make this land our abiding home in weal or in woe, there are some very serious matters for consideration, one of which is the place of the education of our children.

Shall we sustain our home schools or let them go down? Or, sustaining them, shall our support be so tithful and meager and partial as barely to keep the doors open and the houses occupied? Shall we follow up our old friends with our patronage, thereby crippling our own institutions by reducing the number of pupils, or shall we send our sons and daughters to our own Conference colleges, and thereby give them fresh vigor and prosperity? Now, however we may regret the loss of former friends, and admire their arrangements and facilities for educating, yet for one I do not hesitate to say that in every case the preference should be given to the colleges within our own boundaries and under our own supervision. If we intend to live here, and expect to leave our children here when we die, this seems to be the course both of duty and policy.

Because, first, they are our own, and every man's first duty is to his own. They were built with our money, are under the auspices of our Conferences, and are ours in a sense that none others are. A man should be ashamed of himself, as well as despised by everybody else, who will feed and clothe his neighbor's child, and let his own go hungry and ragged, even though his neighbor's should be the more beautiful. These colleges are our children—brought into being by our action—and we should foster them as our own offspring, constantly, tenderly.

In the next place, these extreme Southern lands have somehow developed a peculiar type of personal character, which I admire exceedingly, and desire to see perpetuated; and the best means to do this is to have our children educated on the soil which gave them birth. This observation is not designed as a reflection, in any sense, upon the citizens of other latitudes—to declare our people either their superiors or inferiors. I only mean to express a most earnest wish to see our young men reared under the same social influences which operated to develop the genius and mold the character of such men as Capers and Wightman, Andrew and Pierce, Paine, and McTyeire and Keener, and others perhaps as great, if not so conspicuous, in Church and State. These elements, in their peculiar combination, are found in the far South, and nowhere else on the continent. They are not destroyed by railroads and telegraphs and newspapers and war. He who thinks they are, or can be, is badly mistaken, for they are created by the sunshine and scenery and products of the soil, as well as come down in the traditions of the people; and their finest expression is seen only in those who have been well-nigh all their lives under their influence. The only way to preserve these elements in their fullest force is to have our children taught in our home schools, by men and women to the manor born, to have them cultivate and love this soil, ride these circuits, make laws and govern these States. The bare intellect is developed by the books studied and the methods employed. Character, however, is not so formed, but, resulting from the social atmosphere breathed, is independent of text-books and lectures. To some this may appear a flimsy reason for supporting our Southern colleges. But let them remember that from halls of learning are to come the controlling legislators and preachers of this land, and that their success will depend largely upon the correspondence of their personal characters with the general character of the people they serve. A man trained at Cambridge, Mass., could not in these regions be as efficient as one trained in a Southern college—even though the two might be exactly equal in piety and gifts—simply because character results not so much from education as from the social surroundings of the place where it is received. A church, therefore, organized in a given region of country can reach the highest measure of usefulness only by supplying preachers to those people from themselves.

But, again, religious education is a necessity to vigorous church life. Like missionary effort, it is both aggressive and conservative—conservative because, by truthfully stating the facts and principles of science and philosophy, it defends and protects Christian truth; aggressive because, enabling the mind to see the sophistries of infidelity, it also enables it to make the assault with success. Hence to educate is not merely a matter of expediency, but a solemn and indispensable duty, the neglect of which would as certainly and speedily ruin the church as the neglect of the missionary work would. A church school is as different in its vital structure from other schools as the church is from other organizations of men, because the school is a part of the church itself; and, being a part, is on the same basis of permanency, because on the same basis of divine promise, and should be conducted on the same general methods of operation, and supported by the same obligations of religion.

When our schools are thus recognized as an organic, integral part of the church, as they should be, and education as one of its proper functions, as it really is, then we will just as soon think of abandoning our circuits and stations as of giving up our colleges, or of ceasing to pray for the prosperity of Zion as of ceasing to pray for the prosperity of these institutions, or of sending penitent sinners off somewhere else to be converted as of sending our children off somewhere else to be educated. Not to patronize and pray for and cherish our own colleges seems to me to be not only the most short-sighted policy for people to pursue who expect to bequeath these lands to their children, but a most flagrant and suicidal sin against our church in these parts.

These are some of the reflections I have had on this important subject as the time approaches for our fall sessions to commence. They apply alike to our colleges of both sorts, male and female, in all our Southern Conferences, from North Carolina to Texas. With your consent I may add another chapter or two, for there are great and permanent issues involved in the life or death of these institutions, and every man of us should be up and at work for their continued prosperity.

Yours, etc., J. W. RUSH.

Satan's Mistake.

Not long since we heard an estimable brother, who believes that all who have been made the subjects of regenerating power will, through grace, certainly persevere, and never finally fall, state that satan not only "desired to have Peter," but that he equally "desired" and labored to "have" us, and that it behooved us to watch and pray. While listening the thought struck us that satan was not, and it seems will not be, a believer in the certain perseverance of holy characters. We suppose his personal experience has something to do with his ineradicable opinions on this subject. He was a creation of the holy God, and was therefore a pure being. He had also the purest surroundings; but he fell and was cast down to hell. Then he saw other angels fall. He saw the man made in God's image, but a little lower than the angels, fall, and has seen many other examples of looking back, like Lot's wife, and making shipwreck of the faith."

If it be a fact that no regenerate soul can finally fall, satan's obstinate belief that they can, is, to say the least of it, remarkable. Satan is called an angel of light—a description most suggestive of refined and superior intelligence. It would seem he ought to know whether spiritual lamps can "go out," and whether "the branches" of "the true vine" can "wither." One would think that if he originally believed in the peccability and fallibility of saints, he would come, after at least eighteen hundred years' experience, to see that he was mistaken. His perseverance in his beliefs and habits in this direction is wonderful. It would seem, if he had the least mite of inductive philosophy, that he would long since have concluded, from such an extended course of experience and such an overwhelming array of facts (on the supposition that none have fallen,) that final perseverance must be a law of the spiritual kingdom, and that he is beating the air, and attempting the impossible. But the preacher said, in effect, that satan was not so convinced, but was as much as ever persuaded that believers could finally fail—he still sought "to devour," "to have"—and that this was his constant aim, the subject of his unceasing labors. We think it the most remarkable case of obstinate persistence in an original conviction of which we have heard. If eighteen hundred years of experience can teach satan nothing—if he still believes that believers can finally fail, although he has never known a solitary example—why it is passing strange. W.

A Bishop on His Travels.

Bishop Pierce has been overseeing the church in out-of-the-way places—in the Altamaha district, South Georgia Conference. Why do not all of our venerable superintendents seek out such excursions, just for the refreshment of the thing, as well as for the good to be done? We copy from the Southern Christian Advocate a few paragraphs of the Bishop's entertaining itinerary:

We had a fair attendance of delegates, and a pleasant, useful meeting. I am more than ever convinced that there is a fine outcome in this portion of the South Georgia Conference. There are hard places and dark places, but there are also green spots, inviting and full of promise. The country needs population, schools and churches, and these are on the increase. The Primitive Baptists, especially their preachers, are the incubus on society—the brakes upon the wheels of progress. They set themselves against education, against Sunday schools, against temperance; and in their stupid ignorance pretend to preach by the inspiration of the Almighty.

This is the region for small farmers, for sheep husbandry, and if there were railroads connecting with the highways of the country the lumber trade would be a convenience to our cities and a profit to the people. The country is healthy, the water fair, and everything to eat grows well, except wheat. Corn, oats, potatoes, cane, vegetables, all abundant. If the people do not live well it is their own fault. Fish and game abound. Milk and honey would flow if the people would (as they might) arrange for it.

The brethren had made an appointment for me on Tuesday, so distant that I was constrained to leave on Sunday evening to reach it. Seven of us set out together, dined with Bro. Merritt and family on the way (a good place to stop,) and late in the evening went on to Cobbtown—a place not known to books or maps of geography. A little after sunset we drove up to a house and inquired: "How far to Cobbtown?" The answer was: "You are in it now." After some talk about lodgings, we were divided out in the town and its vicinity. Before we were well settled a messenger from a widow lady came, inviting some of us to preach at her house. My young brethren all declined, and I, as some people would say, "took up the cross." My audience was small, but attentive and serious. Learning that there was no regular preaching there, I arranged with them to be taken in to the Reidsville circuit. So I hope good will come of my wayside sowing.

On Monday we set out for Swainesboro, and after a long, hard, hot, lonely ride arrived about noon. For reasons, here we divided, to meet again at church on the morrow. Rorie was on horseback, and Page, with whom I had journeyed thus far, was in a buggy. These brethren confederated to go on and dine in the country. Then they were to change horses, and thus relieve each other. Late in the evening Williams and I became fellow-travelers, and went on our way a few miles to Mr. Nell McCleod's. We had gone about five miles when we met Rorie a-foot, and leading his horse. "What is the matter?" "When we changed horses I forgot my saddle. I am going back for it. With that, my horse ran away with the buggy, kicked out, and broke things to pieces." "Where is Page?" "He is trying to repair damages, so we may go on when I get back." The brethren spliced and tied up, and went their way. But Rorie's horse must be discontinued at next Conference. He does not suit the itineracy. We want men and horses for all kinds of work. Those who kick up at a change will not answer for our economy.

In the morning I rose with a dry and bitter mouth; rode through the hot sun nearly thirty miles, and on reaching the church was well-nigh spent with heat. The house was large and crowded with people—no ventilation above—and after preaching an hour I became deathly sick, and was obliged to sit down with my sermon unfinished. I had talked long enough, it is true, but the application was essential to the completeness of the discourse. Some of these days I must try that place again—by permission.

Montana.

A communication from Bishop Marvin in the Pacific Methodist gives an interesting account of our work in Montana. We give the following extract:

The late session of the Denver Conference met in Helena on July 29. Only the preachers in the Montana end of the Conference were present. Those in Colorado were a thousand miles away. It would cost them two hundred dollars apiece to attend the session, and I suppose that the brethren even in the most prosperous portions of the work would hardly be able to spend two hundred dollars a year to go to Conference. We did not have full reports from the brethren in Colorado; but we went through all the forms of an Annual Conference session, not omitting the missionary meeting on Saturday night, although at a disadvantage. Elections here are more exciting than in the States, and on Saturday night was the last speaking of a local canvass. The greater part of the men were there, yet we had a very good hearing, and raised largely over a hundred dollars.

The services on Sunday were largely attended, and were very profitable. We had the Lord's Supper at night, and the Conference love-feast in the afternoon. The day was one full of interest, and marked by the outpouring of the Spirit of God.

As to the present outlook of our church here I have the following things to say:

1. The determined and finally successful efforts of a party—the anti-Montana—in the General Conference to defeat the organization of a Montana Conference caused great depression here among preachers and people. They will need occasional reenforcements here for a good many years, and dread any symptoms of a want of sympathy at home that may cut them off from this.

2. The principal appointment in the Territory (Helena) was left without a pastor for ten months during the past year. This looked like practical abandonment, and caused great discouragement. Following the unfriendly action of the General Conference, it seemed to say: Montana is turned out to perish.

3. There have been some special local causes of discouragement incidental to a new country, which I need not enter upon fully.

4. The general financial depression of the country has reached Montana, and for the third year the grasshopper has destroyed a large portion of the crop. The insect is also depositing its eggs so as to insure its presence next spring in countless numbers. There is actual fear of want among some of the farmers.

These are the discouragements. Is anything to be said on the other side?

1. The vacant pastorate in Helena has been supplied by the transfer of the Rev. W. Harris from the Baltimore Conference. Bro. Harris has been received with great cordiality by preachers and people, and his presence has imparted new confidence on all sides.

2. We are still the leading denomination in the Territory.

3. Our preachers are in no way suspected of complicity in the "Indian ring," which is greatly to their credit in the public estimation here.

4. Some circumstances that have heretofore been in our way, and which I need not detail here, are clearing away.

5. The general effect of the Conference session was encouraging, and we all feel decidedly enheartened. The brethren have gone to their fields in good heart and hope, and, as I believe, with a feeling of renewed consecration to God. I look for a great blessing on their labors this year. May God hasten it in his time.

I have been obliged to leave the district to be supplied. I want a man of God for it—a man of good sense, of deep piety, and one who is ready to "endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." I want a man who will care for the flock and not for the fleece—a man of the Pauline stamp. Can the church at home furnish me such a man for Montana? I do not doubt it. Such a man can do a greater work here now than he can in any old country where things are organized and going on in a matter-of-course way.

We have a strong position here, and I have no dread of failure, except from one cause—nor can I believe that that cause will be found to exist; but if the infant church in Montana shall perish, the inscription upon her tomb will be: "She was a robust and lovely child, but was deserted by an unnatural mother, and left to perish." But I do not and cannot believe that such a reproach will be incurred by the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

E. M. MARVIN.

HELENA, MONTANA TERR., Aug. 13, 1875.

Death of Dr. John E. Paine.

Our revered senior Bishop has indeed been called to endure great afflictions of late. The death of his son, Dr. John E. Paine, is a sore trial to the venerable father, a most sorrowful bereavement to a large circle of kindred, and a loss to the community and country. May God sustain those whom he has so greatly chastened. Bishop Paine, in a private note dated Aberdeen, Miss., September 20, says:

We are in great affliction. Four days since we buried the remains of our dear son, Dr. John E. Paine. He and his young bride were in your city in April while I was there. His illness was brief, but his end was calm and triumphant. We surrender him to God, and thank him for the grace which enabled him to feel and proclaim: "All is bright;" and exhorted us all to "meet him in heaven." Love to all. Pray for us. An obituary will be published.

Your brother, R. PAINE.

The following notice of Dr. Paine's death we copy from the Examiner, of Aberdeen:

The community has again received a severe shock in the death of our talented young fellow-citizen, Dr. John E. Paine, which occurred on Wednesday morning, the fifteenth instant, after a brief illness.

Dr. Paine, son of the aged and beloved senior Bishop of the Methodist Church South, was a young gentleman of noble attributes and stainless character. Earnest, energetic, talented and zealous, he would have risen to eminence in the arduous profession of his choice; and, though passing away at the early age of twenty-three, had yet lived long enough to leave behind him an example that many a youth will follow to his profit in this life and the next.

To his aged parents and brothers and sisters, and to the "nearer one yet, and a dearer one far than all others," we tender our warmest sympathy, though well aware that in such an hour words are but idle sounds, even though faithfully interpreting the most sincere emotions of the heart. God be with them.

WHAT will Bros. Hartzell and Haven say to such utterances as these from the New York Methodist?

We suppose there is some real curiosity at the bottom of the following question in the Methodist Advocate: "Why does the Methodist oppose and misrepresent this work and those engaged in it, and bestow its favors upon the Methodist Episcopal Church South? Does it do this through ignorance or duplicity—which?" We have not uttered one word, not so much as a syllable, against our work in the South. The trouble is, we suppose, that any recognition of the Church South as a Methodist evangelical church offends our Atlanta brother. As well as we can make out, he believes that Northern men should be taught that the seven hundred thousand brethren of the other church are only nominally Christians and really rebels. We think one paper quite enough to supply the religious market for that view of the Southern question. Our "favors" are a recognition of these seven hundred thousand Southern Methodists as just as good Methodists as any other seven hundred thousand; that we favor the building of a Wesley memorial church at Savannah, and give a hearing to the preachers and laymen of the Southern church who favor fraternity.

We referred some time ago to the very moderate success in mixing races in our churches which had attended some efforts in that direction. Somebody, writing his fifth article (his name is not given) in the Northwestern, makes us speak of "the very moderate success that has attended our work in the South." We hope that shame suppressed the name of the writer as well as a definite reference to us. Our work in the South has been very successful, and our success is due to allowing "enste" churches; the mixers of races have only moderately succeeded in their fanatical policy. The two things are very different. The policy of local liberty has won in the South, and will always win.

WE ARE glad to learn that Martha Washington College, Abingdon, Va., is in a very prosperous condition. President Jones, writing on business, September 18, says: "We have opened with a larger patronage and better prospects than the college ever enjoyed before."

We need hardly say that this institution stands in the front rank of female colleges, and that the location, for beauty and salubrity, is not excelled. Parents who wish to send their daughters to a cooler climate cannot do better than to patronize Martha Washington. For particulars see card in the ADVOCATE, and send for catalogue.

WE ARE thankful to be able to report the safety of Dr. Robert Alexander and family, who for a time were supposed to have been lost in the storm. A note from Dr. Alexander's father-in-law, the venerable David Ayers, dated Galveston, September 24, brings the good tidings of his escape. The doctor's house was swept away, and himself and family lost everything except the clothes they wore. The particulars of their deliverance have not reached us.

TRANSFERRED.—Bro. Parker will please announce the transfer of Rev. C. J. Nugent from the Mississippi to the White River Conference, in elder's orders. R. PAINE.

ABERDEEN, MISS., Sept. 20, 1875.

WE cannot escape to-morrow by sleep, nor eternity by death.

MARRIED.

BATES—LONELY.—In Chilton county, Ala., September 21, by Rev. J. W. Rush, Mr. Benjamin Bates and Miss Sallie Lonely.

MILLIGAN—SCARBROUGH.—By Rev. R. A. Timmons, August 12, 1875, Mr. Newton Milligan, of Gadsden, Ala., to Miss Amie Scarbrough, of White Plains, Ala.

COBB—SMITH.—By Rev. R. A. Timmons, September 16, 1875, Mr. W. R. Cobb to Miss Mattie Smith, all of Calhoun county, Ala.

Periodicals.

WARE'S VALLEY MONTHLY for October has: University Education; Origin of the Mississippi, a poem; Clara, the Queen; The Philosophy of Finance; Reminiscences of Gen. Sterling Price; A Talk About Different Kinds of Money; The Germs of the Beautiful, and other articles. This periodical has improved steadily from the first number, and takes rank with the best magazines of the country. Dr. Leftwich is a capital editor and magazine writer. We commend Ware's Valley Monthly to the patronage of our people.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY for October is very handsomely illustrated, and contains a great variety of entertaining articles. We note especially: An Overland Trip to the Grand Canon, The Cradle Tomb at Westminster, A Mad Man of Letters, Recollections of Liszt and Von Bulow, Some Vegetable Eccentricities, The Story of Seven Oaks, The Winthrop-Drury Affair.

THE ST. NICHOLAS for October gives us plenty of fine pictures, and Captain Porter and the Essex, The Frigate-Bird, Some Queer Animals, How it Went, Birds that Build Play-Houses, Hunting for my Horses, and other things of interest to the young folks.

THE GALAXY for October has, among other articles of interest: Sherman's Memoirs, Through Utah, Claims to the Discovery of America, The Napoleon of History, The Letters of Madam DeSabran, English Pronunciation.

BEAUTIFUL AND TOUCHING.—On Thursday, says the Greensboro Home Journal, the venerable and truly reverend Dr. Lovick Pierce, who is spending a few days with his many relatives and friends in this county, rendered dear to him by years of residence, labor and association with them, paid a visit to his old friend and cotemporary, the Hon. Thomas Stocks; at his residence, some eight miles from Greensboro. Judge Stocks is one month the junior of Dr. Pierce, both being in the ninety-first year of their age. The names of these venerable and distinguished men are historical. For nearly three-fourths of a century they have been worthy co-laborers for the public weal; for more than half a century, in different spheres, prominently so—the one as an eminent Christian minister, the other as a wise and conservative Christian statesman. Though belonging to different branches of Christ's visible church, inspired by the same faith and hope and love, they have worked under the same spiritual Head in life, and will not long be sundered in death. The reunion of these ancient worthies on Thursday must have been beautiful and touching—an impressive illustration of Christian fraternity.—Southern Christian Advocate.

READ the following from the New York Nation: "It will be, in short, a sore day for the United States when the people of this country allow themselves to be seduced into the belief that the Church of Rome has become reconciled to republicanism or to liberty of thought, or to anything else which recognizes the existence of any rule of conduct, in small things or in great, not furnished by herself, or that the Catholic clergy have the least intention of putting themselves on the same level with or using the same weapons as the Protestant clergy on the school question, or any other question which is likely to affect their own power, either nearly or remotely, directly or indirectly."

THE Swedish Mission Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church was held in Wisby, Sweden, commencing August 11. Forty-nine members (ministers) were present. In arranging the work for the ensuing year it was found that sixty missionaries would be needed. These were all provided.

NEEDLES AT CLUB RATES.—The advertisement of the Defiance Needle Company, No. 658 Broadway, New York, is worthy of attention. Those who may be able to conveniently club together will obtain needles at greatly reduced rates where one hundred can be ordered at a time.

E. E. F. ROSS, ESQ., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

WE WOULD again call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of Messrs. Poole & Hunt, bespeaking for these gentlemen the favorable consideration of all who are in need of any machinery included in their varied list, as published in our columns. They have on hand a very large stock of miscellaneous machinery patterns, and can promptly fill orders for almost any character of work. Wherever their machinery has been used it has given entire satisfaction.

DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.—Our excellent neighbors, the Messrs. Gelpan Bros., have the general agency for the above-named gin. The advantages of the flange gin above others is clearly stated in the card of the agents, which may be found in our advertising columns, and to which we invite the attention of planters. The agents are gentlemen of well-known integrity and excellent standing in this community, and throughout the country where they are known, and are worthy of confidence.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY.—It will be seen by the card in our advertising columns that the University will open the next session on the first Wednesday in October next. We are glad to learn that the organization of this valuable institution is the most complete since the war. The Southern University is entitled to a liberal patronage, and if the people of Alabama are true to themselves it will have it.

OUR HOME PHYSICIAN.—That enterprising publisher, E. B. Treat, of 805 Broadway, New York, advertises in another part of the ADVOCATE for agents to sell the above-named book. Mr. Treat is well known in New York and throughout the country, is thoroughly established in business, and those who wish to take agencies need have no fears of his failing to comply with his engagements. See advertisement.

THE IRVING HOUSE, on the corner of Broadway and Twelfth street, New York, operated on the European plan, offers rooms at very reasonable rates, ranging from $7 per week upward. Those with whom we have met who have been guests at the Irving speak in high terms of Mr. George P. Harlow, the proprietor. See advertisement elsewhere.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE.—We are glad to learn, through a private note from Prof. Bass, that this valuable institution has opened prosperously. This, we believe, is the oldest chartered female college in the world, and we regard it as one of the best in existence. It gives us great pleasure to hear of its prosperity.

CITRATE OF MAGNESIA.—The attention of our readers is directed to the advertisement of the Effervescing Magnesia manufactured by Arthur Rogers, at 193 Spring street, New York, the use of which is doubtless familiar to most of them.

IRON-CLAD PAINT.—The Empire Iron Clad Paint Company, No. 30 West Broadway, New York, advertise for agents to sell the Iron Clad paint, the character and use of which is set forth in their card, to be found elsewhere.

GRATES AND FENDERS.—Messrs. Conover, Woolley & Co., manufacturers, invite attention to their large assortment of grates and fenders. They offer liberal discounts to dealers. See their card and send for catalogue.

YEAST POWDERS.—The advertisement of the Dry Hop Yeast Powders, manufactured by the Twin Brothers, 31 Church street, New York, will be found elsewhere, to which we invite the attention of our readers.

STATIONERY PACKAGES.—We acknowledge the receipt of a stationery package from Bride & Co., 709 Broadway, New York, which is certainly a marvel of cheapness. They want agents. See advertisement.

THOSE of our readers who propose to visit Cincinnati during the coming Industrial Exposition will be glad to know that this paper can be seen on file at the office of E. N. Freshman, advertising agent, 101 West Fourth street, where all facilities will be extended them to read their home news.

MEDICAL.

THIS unrivaled Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will Cure all Diseases Caused by Derangement of the Liver.

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a Bitter or Bad Taste in the Mouth, Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels Alternately Costive and Lax, Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done, Debility, Low Spirits, a Thick, Yellow Appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a Dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and Death will ensue.

This Great Unfailing Specific will not be Found the Least Unpleasant.

For DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heartburn, etc.,

Saddle Gaits.

As something of a guide in the selection of a horse, as well as in the training of him for such a purpose, we present below an analysis of what are known as saddle gaits. It is not to be supposed that every saddle-horse will possess all or even a considerable number of these ways of going. A large proportion of them go but one or two gaits, that may be preferred by the owner, no other being required. The possession of several different gaits by a single animal is rather exceptional than otherwise, but a first-class saddle-horse is expected to go, at command, eight different gaits, and, in proportion as he approaches this standard, his value for such purposes is raised. The walk, trot, pace and gallop are the cardinal or natural gaits, and need no description to be generally understood. The artificial and acquired gaits are as follows:

1. The fox trot is a slight modification of the true trot, and perhaps to call it a "brokeu" trot, in which the fore foot touches the ground an instant in advance of the diagonal hind foot, will convey as correct an understanding of it as a more elaborate description of the alternate placing of the feet. It has the slowest limits of the artificial gaits, and is an all-day gait. Its range is generally from four to six miles per hour. Occasionally a horse may show a rate of seven miles an hour. It is the utility gait of the general saddle-horse, and every one worthy the name is expected to have it. At this gait a loose rein is always used, and the horse is apt to carry his head low. Drivers of trotting horses in harness will recognize it as a step frequently taken for two or three strokes by horses just in the act of slowing into a walk.

2. The running walk is also a modification of the true trot, but in this case the head is carried higher, and the hind foot takes the ground just in advance of the diagonal fore foot, breaking the concussion. A closer rein is generally held than in the fox trot, and the pace is a faster one, and may be carried to a three-minute gait before the horse is forced out of it. This is a more showy gait than the fox trot, and in it the poise of the horse is such as to give him more of a climbing action in front. In the running walk the cadence of the footfalls is not unlike that of the ordinary walk quickened, and the feet take the ground in the same order. It might be described as a variation of the true walk by imparting to it an elastic or bounding quality; in fact a walk on a run, if such a contradictory description is admissible. Trotters in harness frequently get away at this gait when started suddeuly, under a firm pull upon the bit, before they settle to the true stroke.

3. The rack (or side rack, as it is sometimes called) is a modification of the true pace, in which the hind foot touches the ground in advance of its leading fore foot. This gait admits of a wide range of speed—say from four miles an hour to faster than a three-minute gait. This is the favorite saddle gait with ladies, and seems better suited to the side-saddle than any other. Few gentlemen like it as well as the fox trot, though it is often used as an all-day business-gait, and of the two is more readily taken by horses that have a natural pacing tendency.

4. The single foot (or single-footed rack) cannot be classed as either a diagonal or as a lateral gait. It is exactly intermediate between a trot and a pace, or, if you please, is such an exaggeration of the fox trot as to bring it half way to the rack, or vice versa. Each foot seems to move independently of association with either of the others, and the same interval of time elapses between each footfall. It is seldom seen in harness. It is a fast gait—generally not less than ten miles an hour, and can be increased to a three-minute gait. It affords the smoothest seat of all the gaits, because that portion of the animal which supports the saddle apparently glides evenly forward, while each quarter, moving separately, causes none of that bounding or jolting of the trot or pace. These four artificial gaits, in connection with the four natural ones first named, constitute all the requisite gaits of a trained saddle-horse.—Spirit of the Times.

TREATMENT OF OLD STRAWBERRY BEDS.—We are often asked how we treat our strawberry beds after we have taken off one crop. We plow them under generally, but sometimes we take a scythe aud mow off all the tops of the plants as close as we can, rake off the leaves, cut out walks, and weed them if necessary, and then let them grow, to bear another year. We have had most excellent success with beds treated in this way. If the land was well manured in the start, and the plants have done well the first aud second years, there are few weeds and little grass among the plants, and it will generally pay to mow off the tops, and leave the beds to bear again. It seems contrary to reason to mow off the leaves, aud we once denounced it as a heresy; but facts are stubborn things, and the facts are as we have given above. We have tried it, and with the best success. We shall try it again this year. When the strawberry is cultivated in hills they need not be renewed oftener than once in five or six years, aud we have known them to do well even longer than that. For field culture, or growing on a large scale for the market, it will probably be found cheaper and better to plant each year, and plow up after one crop; but for gardens it will often prove profitable to mow off, and keep over the beds for a second crop.—Congregationalist.

UNFERMENTED WINE.—In answer to several inquiries we give the following directions for preparing sacramental wine:

The grapes should be allowed to thoroughly ripen. They are then picked, and all green and rotten grapes and stems removed. The grapes are then crushed and pressed in the usual manner. If it is desired to have the wine sweetened, the sugar should now be added aud stirred until it is dissolved. From one-fourth of a pound to three-fourths of a pound to each gallon may be used.

The juice is now put into bottles and the bottles put into water, and the water raised to the boiling temperature, and kept boiling for half an hour. At the end of this time remove them one by one, and cork them tightly, wiring in the corks. Replace them as fast as corked, and boil them again for an hour.

Wine thus prepared will keep indefinitely; and we think those who use it thus prepared for sacramental purposes will desire nothing better.—Northern Christian Advocate.

A CALL by the American Rural Home for the best whitewash for out-door work brings several recipes, one of which—from James H. Kelly, Garbuttsville, N. Y.—is so highly approved by him, after long trial on wood, brick and stone, that next spring he shall use it for painting five thousand feet of new picket fence: Slake half a bushel of lime in boiling water, keeping it covered during the process. Then strain it and add a peck of salt previously dissolved in warm water. Then add three pounds ground rice that has been put into boiling water and boiled to a thin paste, half a pound Spanish whiting, and a pound of clear glue dissolved in warm water. Mix all well together, and let the mixture stand for several days. Keep this wash ready in a kettle, and when used put it on as hot as possible with paint or whitewash brushes.—New York Tribune.

I AM so much a utilitarian that I prefer the useful to the useless.—Sir W. Hamilton.

H. D. ROGERS & CO.,

(Late of Baker, Rogers & Co.,)

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENTS,

22 W. Fourth St. (Merchants' Exchange Building,) CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Orders for all kinds of Merchandise and Manufactured Goods filled at the lowest market rates; and any information needed regarding prices or other matters connected with the trade promptly furnished.

Our office in the entrance to the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 20 and 22 West Fourth street, where its many members are constantly passing, gives us the best of facilities for exhibiting samples of Grain, Cotton and Manufactured Articles, which advantage we offer to those desiring our services.

From the Cincinnati Price Current, March 13, 1869.

"We desire to call the attention of merchants to the interior to the card of Messrs. H. D. Rogers & Co., which is published in another column. This firm proposes introducing a new business, namely: filling orders for any kind of Merchandise or Manufactured Goods to be found in this market, charging only a small commission, thus enabling country merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and indeed all classes, to procure any article they may need at the lowest cash price, without incurring the expenses of coming in the city. And as Mr. Rogers is thoroughly conversant with the city trade in all its departments, and one whose integrity and fidelity to the interests of his customers are of the highest order, no doubts need be entertained by those sending their orders to this firm that they will be faithfully attended to."

Quotations furnished on application. Shippers and others forwarding samples will have their value ascertained, and an offer made, if practicable.

With an experience of twenty years in merchandising in this city, we can offer the best facilities and references. y22 3m

PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.

THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Emory and Henry College,

ON THE

Virginia and Tenn. Air-Line Railroad,

WASHINGTON COUNTY, VA.

OUR Collegiate year is divided into two terms of twenty weeks each. The Fall term begins on the NINTH OF SEPTEMBER next, at the close of which the Spring term commences, January 27, 1876. Two Hundred Dollars, paid in advance, will meet the expenses for tuition, board, fuel, room-rent, washing, contingent and library fees for the entire year of forty weeks. The seeking the discipline and culture of a thorough Collegiate, Scientific or Preparatory course are requested to inquire concerning the character, of our school of any of the leading men of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of the professors (by their permission) of the University of Virginia, or of our Almanac, widely scattered over the South. Further information or a catalogue may be obtained by addressing E. E. WILEY, Prest.,

Scientific.

—A railroad is soon to be built from Naples to the top of Mount Vesuvius, near the crater. The distance is about twenty-six miles. In case of an eruption the signal warnings will probably be: "When the crater whistles let the engines look out!"

—The first result of the late transit of Venus has been given to the world by M. Puiseux, who has calculated by its means the solar parallax. The data employed were those obtained by M. Mouchez, at St. Paul Island, and by M. Flourials, at Pekin. The parallax thus obtained is 8.879"—a number which M. Puiseux considers exact to the second decimal place.

—Dr. Hagar, of Berlin, believes that anliine colors are, as a rule, poisonous in their action upon the human skin. He recommends, therefore, that woolen garments colored with the anlline dyes should not be worn next to the skin, and suggests, as a test, that part of the wool be heated to the boiling-point in a test tube, with ninety per cent. of alcohol, and if the latter acquire a red, violet or violet-blue tint the coloring matter is suspicious.

—We learn from Nature that the scientific results to be obtained from arctic exploration will be carefully attended to in making the arrangements for the forthcoming arctic expedition. Each officer will take up a special branch of scientific investigation, and will devote himself, during the interval between his appointment and the sailing of the expedition, to acquiring such knowledge as will enable him to exert his energies most usefully. There will also be a civilian naturalist or geologist in each ship, who will be carefully selected with reference to special knowledge and other qualifications. It is possible also that an engineer officer may accompany the expedition, with charge of magnetic and pendulum observations. Some of the men forming the ships' companies will also be selected for their special qualifications.

—An ingenious contrivance for enabling persons to breathe in poisonous vapors, or dense smoke, has recently been invented by Capt. Shaw, of the London fire brigade. It consists of a close fitting hood, with a respirator, holding a filter, the invention of Prof. Tyndall, which is made up of a valve chamber and filter tube about four inches long, screwed on outside, with access to it from the inside by a wooden mouthpiece. The charge for the filter is put in with the tube turned upside down and the lower valve removed, and consists of the following materials: Half an inch deep of dry cotton-wool, an inch deep of the same wool saturated with glycerine, a thin layer of dry wool, half an inch deep of fragments of charcoal, half an inch deep of dry wool, half an inch deep of fragments of lime, and about an inch of dry wool. The whole can be put on and adjusted in a few seconds by the wearer.

HE is the richest man who is content with what he has.

I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED

STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their thimble skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

On Saturday the market opened with an active demand, and fully 1,200 bales changed hands during the morning at about previous rates for the general run of the offerings, but at hardening prices for all desirable kinds, after which the movement became more active, and, under the lively competition among buyers, factors were enabled in most cases to realize fuller prices than they could have commanded on Friday. This was especially the case with good staple kinds, which were in active demand and moderate supply, and ruled ⅛c. above the outside figures for the general run of the offerings. The business was the largest this season, summing up 2,900 bales. On Monday the dispatches were calculated to depress the market. The sales summed up 1,800 bales. Middling sold as low as 12⅜c., under inside figures for that grade, and also at 12⅝@13⅛c., strict middling at 13⅛c., and good middling to middling fair at 13⅜c. On Tuesday, notwithstanding a decline of ⅛c. at New York, the market opened with a good demand and continued active throughout the day, the sales summing up 2,750 bales. Low middling sold as low as 12⅝c., and as high as 12⅞@12⅝c., strict do. at 12⅞@12⅝c., middling at 12⅞c. up to 13⅛c., and good middling at 13⅜c.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 7,600 bales, against 3,600 for the corresponding time last week and 2,250 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 23,190 bales, against 23,905 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 8,216 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 24,845—146,303 against 121,458. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 2,751 bales to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 9,250 to Great Britain, and of 600 to France. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

Religious Notices.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Siloam, on the Lodsville circuit, to commence on Wednesday night before the second Sunday in October. We have erected a spacious arbor, and tent-holders are putting up new tents for the accommodation of visitors and friends. Our tent-holders purpose supporting all outside a radius of six miles from the ground. Preachers are earnestly solicited to attend:

J. A. MILLER, P. E.
A. E. CLAY, P. C.

MOBILE DIST., ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—Local preachers will please be prepared to report in writing the extent and results of their labors to the fourth Quarterly Conference. See Discipline, page 95. S. H. COX, P. E.

SPRING CREEK CAMP MEETING.—There will be a camp meeting at Spring Creek camp ground, commencing on Friday night before the second Sabbath in October next. One and all are cordially invited to attend. This meeting will be carried out strictly on the self-sustaining plan. We will have a large boarding tent and public lot completed by the time of meeting for the accommodation of any who come unprepared to take care of themselves. Board will be furnished on a reasonable rate. The public tent will furnish a place for sleeping, but no bedding. All will bring their blankets or quilts with them. We want our preachers to attend. We will take care of them.

H. B. NASH,
J. A. ERVAN,
D. BREWER,
Committee.

THERE will be a camp meeting at Providence camp ground, fourteen miles east of Hazlehurst, Miss., commencing October 7, 1875. Preachers and people are invited to attend. There will be accommodations, for all who do not tent, at reasonable rates—fifty cents per meal, and fifty cents for lodging. The meeting will be on the self-sustaining plan. Brethren, come in the name of Jesus. P. A. JOHNSTON.

THE CAMP MEETING for the Raphael circuit will begin on Thursday before the third Sabbath in October. Ministers are not only invited, but they are earnestly requested to attend. The camp ground is six miles northeast of Pineville, on the Bayou Flagon. Come one! come all! J. L. P. SHEPPARD, P. C.

THE Summit district camp meeting will be held at Magnolia, Miss., on the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, commencing October 7, 1875. It will be held strictly on the self-sustaining plan. Ample arrangements will be made to furnish cheap transportation, fare and lodging on said occasion.

C. C. GIBSON,
Chairman of Executive Committee.

CAMP MEETING.—The camp meeting to be held on the Saline Bayou, near Pleasant Grove church, twelve miles west of Winnfield, in Winn parish, La., will commence on Thursday night, October 21.

All are invited to come prepared to take care of themselves, as the meeting will be conducted on the self-sustaining plan. Ministers are respectfully invited, and will be provided for.

H. A. ROBBIE, P. C.

THERE will be a camp meeting nine miles north of Eutaw, Ala., commencing on Thursday night before the third Sabbath in October. Preachers, local and traveling, are invited.

J. W. MCCANN.

THERE will be a camp meeting on the Beulah camp ground, near Fort Jessup, La., commencing on the eighth day of October, 1875. The meeting will be on the self-supporting plan. Provision will be made especially for the preachers. Everybody is invited to attend our camp meeting. J. M. FRANKLIN, P. C.

Columbia, puzzled what she should display
Of true home-make on her Centennial day,
Asked Brother Jonathan. He scratched his head,
Whittled awhile reflectively, and said:
"Your own invention, and own making too?
Why, any child could tell ye what to do;
Show 'em your Civil Service, and explain
How all men's loss is everybody's gain;
Show your new patent to increase your rents
By paying quarters for collecting cents;
Show your short cut to cure financial ills
By making paper collars current bills;
Show your new bleaching process, cheap and brief,
To wit: a jury chosen by a thief;
Show your State Legislatures; show your rings;
And challenge Europe to produce such things
As high officials sitting half in sight
To share the plunder and to fix things right.
If that don't fetch her, why, you only need
To show your latest style in martyrs—Tweed.
She'll find it hard to hide her spiteful tears
At such advance in one poor hundred years."

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, Sept. 28.—Advices from Brazovia, dated the twenty-third, confirm the reports first received from Matagorda. The town was washed away, excepting only four houses which remain standing. No lives were lost. The people were saved by clinging to the cedar-trees in the vicinity. At the town of Columbia twenty houses were blown down. No lives reported lost. One man was killed at Chenango by a falling tree.

Many plantations have been greatly damaged, and some literally torn to pieces. Sugar-houses, gin-houses, fences and everything was partly or wholly blown down. The great losses cannot be correctly reported.

GALVESTON, Sept. 29.—The steamship Harlan arrived from Indianola to-day. The accounts by mail are gathered from passengers, who represent the loss of life at Indianola and vicinity greater than at first reported. The list of those known to be lost numbers one hundred and seventy-three.

Large contributions for Indianola and the coast sufferers are coming forward from Austin, San Antonio, New Braunfels, Dallas, Waco and Shreveport; also from many of the Northern and Eastern cities.

A reporter of the News returned on the steamship Harlan to-day, and brings the following additional particulars from Indianola:

Along the entire route were seen wrecks of houses, wharves, furniture and trunks floating. The outer light-house at Pass Cavolls stands. On the point of Matagorda Island one house remains. All those at Saluria on the east end are gone. On the opposite side stands the remnant of Capt. Decrow's house. The men were all drowned.

At Saluria not a vestige remains to mark where Capt. Nichols, Dr. Leake, Capt. Hill and the Humphrey brothers resided. The two former iron lighthouses, with their occupants, were washed away.

At Indianola ruin and devastation only could be seen. Houses were broken down and piled one upon another; among which the most notable was the wreck of the Episcopal church, lying immediately on the bank of the bayou. This church, before the storm, stood eight blocks up in the heart of the city. Looking down Main street from the boat, it was apparent that scarcely a house remained intact.

GLEN COVE, L. I., Sept. 29.—Dr. Porteous, late pastor of All Souls Church, Brooklyn, and Louis Benjamin were drowned while going to Sea Cliff in a small boat. Three other persons were in the boat.

DES MOINES, Sept. 30.—Grant responded to a call, reading quite a lengthy speech. He expressed gratification, recalling the days when they had suffered together to preserve a government which they believed worth fighting for, even dying for. We will not deny to those who fought against us any privilege under the joint government which we claim for ourselves; on the contrary, we welcome all such to help build up waste places, perpetuate our institutions against all enemies as brothers in common heritage, but we are not prepared to apologize for the past. To guard against a recurrence of those days we must begin by guarding against every enemy preventing the prosperity of free republican institutions.

Regarding politics he said: We are to have another contest in the near future of our political existence. I predict a dividing line not to be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism, ambition and ignorance. Let us all labor for security, free thought, speech and press; pure, moral, unfettered religious sentiments, and equal rights and privileges for all, irrespective of nationality, color or religion; encourage free schools; resolve nothing appropriated for them be applied to support sectarian schools; resolve that neither State nor nation shall support institutions save those where every child may get a common school education, unmixed with atheistic, pagan or sectarian teachings; leave religion to the family altar; keep Church and State forever separate. With these safeguards I believe the battles which created the Army of the Tennessee have not been fought in vain.

Sherman closed the speaking with a humorous, short speech, in which he said he wished all speeches made here to-night could be printed in full and scattered broadcast throughout the South, to show the people there how the ex-soldiers of the North all felt toward them.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—It is stated that the Third Avenue Savings Bank has suspended, and will not open to-day for business, and that application has been made for a receiver. Since last Thursday all moneys received from depositors have been placed in envelopes, with the names of the depositors thereon. These have not been entered on the bank-book, and will be returned in full.

As far as can at present be learned, fifty cents on the dollar, perhaps more, can be paid depositors. Since its incorporation in 1854 this bank has sustained three runs—the first in 1868, which lasted four days; the second in 1871, and the last in January, 1872, during which $4,000,000 was paid in the ten weeks the panic lasted. The bank has never recovered from the effects of the celebrated run, and its present insolvency is simply due to the impossibility of realizing the nominal value of its investments.

Its depositors number about eight thousand, and the amount due them is about $1,340,000.

NEW YORK, Oct. 2.—At a general meeting of the ticket-agents, at Saratoga, it was decided to reduce the rate between New York and New Orleans to $12.50, with a general reduction of $1.50 to Atlanta and points south of that place. This action was not generally promulgated on account of the efforts of certain lines to defeat the reduction, but it has finally been fixed to go into effect November 1. An excursion ticket between New York and Jacksonville, Fla., was fixed at $60, but, an important line objecting, all excursion rates for the present have been abandoned.

Jacmel, Hayti, advices of September 17 report much damage there, both on land and water, from the hurricanes about that date. Kingston, Jamaica, advices also report that the storm did much damage on that island. A number of vessels suffered. Several vessels disabled by the storms have put into Jamaica ports.

The subscriptions in this city for Texas relief fund to date foot up $5,345.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 2.—A crowd gathered around the bank, and the president said preparations had been made to pay all claims not otherwise provided for. At ten o'clock the street and sidewalks were jammed, and the door swung open amid the cheers of the crowd. Flags were at the mastheads, and there was saluting on Meig's wharf at half-past ten o'clock. Gold is flowing both ways, and it is believed the deposits will equal if not exceed the payments.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 4.—The Nevada Bank opened to-day. A large crowd present; no demonstration.

The Bank of California is doing business as usual. No extraordinary call has been made on its resources.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—The fifteenth annual fair of the St. Louis Agricultural and Mechanical Association opened to-day under favorable auspices. The weather was very fine, and the attendance large, there being not less than twenty-five thousand persons present.

NASHVILLE, Oct. 4.—Vanderbilt University was inaugurated to-day.

THE HORSE PLAGUE SPREADING. Says a Washington special of September 28:

The horse distemper that broke out so violently in New York the other day reached Washington on its way southward. The distemper does not threaten as serious results as the epizootic of a few years ago. Constant care and warm shelter from drafts are, however, necessary to insure speedy recovery. This new disease has attacked the horses in the stables of the Washington and Georgetown railroad, about one hundred in number, and they are all sick. The fire department horses have been attacked with the disease, and in nearly all the public and private stables there are cases. The disease, although it has symptoms identically the same as attended the epizootic, is not regarded as anything worse than a slight influenza, which seems to be contagious. Stable men state that the first cases which appeared here were about ten days since, and that thus far there have been but few serious cases, and except the old and infirm horses, that had not strength enough to recover, there have been no deaths.

RANDOLPH CT., ALABAMA CONFERENCE.
September 11, 1875.

Whereas, We have heard with heartfelt sorrow of the great affliction which almighty God, in his inscrutable wisdom, has permitted to befall our much-beloved presiding elder, Rev. J. W. Shores; therefore,

Resolved, That we as members of this Quarterly Conference, and as brethren together in Christ, extend our warmest sympathies to our dear brother and his family in their sore affliction, and promise that our earnest prayers shall ascend to almighty God for his entire recovery to health.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the brother, and also to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

UNION CHURCH CAMP MEETING.

Mr. Editor: Friday evening, the tenth, was the time appointed for the camp meeting at Union church, in Clarke county, being the first held since long before that cruel and relentless war which desolated our fair homes and impoverished our once happy people. We drove into camp just as the sun went down behind the western hills to bathe his head in old ocean's gems. We took a little repast and hurried to the stand to listen to the first sermon preached under the new arbor. Our pastor, W. Ira Powers, and the good people around Union deserve a great deal of credit for the splendid arbor built at this camp ground. The good which has and will be done here, year after year, will only be revealed in eternity. Influences will go out that will live when this generation has passed from the stage of action; yea, will live through the endless ages of eternity. We had with us our presiding elder, A. J. Briggs, who preached with unction from on high, and with delight to his hearers. During the meeting he preached on "Recognition in Heaven," which was one of his happiest efforts. Christians wept together for joy in anticipation of a happy reunion beyond this vale of tears. Of the itinerant preachers, we had Dr. Turner, from the Suggsville circuit; Bro. Kelley, from Rembert Hills; Bro. Wild, from Bladon Springs, and Bro. Ira W. Powers. All preached with great acceptability to this people. Of the local ministers, we had Bros. Chapman, Amberson, Cox and Calhoun laboring in our Master's vineyard for the conversion of those that are yet exposed to Jehovah's wrath.

Mr. Editor, I have never witnessed such an outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Our heavenly Father has visited this portion of old Clarke, and I trust it is an omen of better times. The church was graciously revived, backsliders reclaimed, and penitents crowded the altar, crying for mercy and asking what they must do to be saved. The number of persons in attendance during the week was estimated at from eight hundred to one thousand persons, and on Sunday from twelve hundred to thirteen hundred. I think there were about sixty conversions during the week. On Thursday morning after prayer we repaired to our tents for breakfast, and then bid adieu to all, promising to meet again next fall if it be the will of God.

As I rode along on my way home through the piny woods I imagined I could hear the beautiful songs of Zion and the shouts of new-born souls. I thought of the happy home that waits us just beyond the river; I thought of the many loved ones that have already crossed over, waiting and watching to greet us on the other shore; I thought of heaven, with her pearly gates, her golden streets and rivers of pure delight; I thought of the tree of life, and that blood-washed throng that went up through great tribulation; I thought of the church militant, with her noble army of young soldiers of the cross, and old war-worn veterans who have borne the burden and heat of the day, following the footsteps of our blessed Master, and agonizing to enter into the saints' everlasting rest; I thought of the ecstatic joy that awaits the finally faithful.

Mr. Editor, I must close, and I hope that at our next camp meeting we will have you and some of our Bishops with us. We have learned to love you from the many happy greetings of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE at our firesides. It is always a welcome visitor.

Truly your brother in Christ,
B. M. ALLEN.

TALLAHATTA, ALA., September 27, 1875.

SMITH'S STATION, ALA.—Mr. Editor: We have been blessed with some very good meetings on the Crawford circuit this season. At Dickinson chapel we held a meeting that lasted six days. It was indeed a time to be remembered, and much might be said about it, but we will only state that thirty-five were added to the church, besides three others by certificate.

At Crawford we held a four days' meeting. The congregations were unusually large and serious, and we had many penitents at the altar, but only two joined the church.

At Mount Zion the third quarterly meeting was protracted, and Dr. McCarty remained until Tuesday. After he left the meeting, for the most part, protracted itself for nine days. It was a good meeting at the beginning, and continued so to the close. Great good was accomplished among the membership, and eleven were added to the church.

At Wesley chapel the meeting lasted four days, and eight were added to the church. We have reason to believe that all who joined the church were converted, as well as others.

Financially there is much gloom in these parts. We have had a most distressing drouth this year, and crops are very short. An aged brother, who, like Bishop McTyeire's man in Texas, has been raising corn to feed the preacher's horse for forty years, remarked a few days since that he had never known so complete a failure in the corn crop; yet our people have a good name in this regard, and hopes are entertained that we shall be able to meet our obligations, as we have done up to this time.

One word about our Advocates. I occupy the extreme northeast corner of the New Orleans territory. We are bounded on the north by the Nashville, and on the east by the old Southern Advocate. My people are mostly Georgians and their descendants, and what is called the Georgia trait is to believe that anything from Georgia is decidedly better than the same thing from any other quarter. In the face of all this, our ADVOCATE is ahead, and is constantly gaining ground, and holds every position taken with the least possible difficulty. Yours truly,

W. W. GRAHAM.

SEPTEMBER 29, 1875.

TAYLORVILLE MISSION, SEASHORE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: It has pleased God again to revive his work at St. Ely church, on this work in Smith county.)

I began a meeting there on Saturday, the eighteenth of September, under very unfavorable circumstances. We closed on Monday night. The last service was the most interesting of all. Penitents flocked to the altar, fairly crowding upon each other; and after we arose from our knees some still remained, and we could hear the prayers of penitents going up to a throne of grace in loud and earnest tones. Men that never were known to be interested in a meeting before were interested, and many were happy in the Lord. It was the best meeting I ever attended, every service being a good one. I was assisted by Bro. J. O. Napier, of the Westville circuit. During the meeting twelve were added to the church, and backsliders were reclaimed. We have at that church a membership of between forty and fifty. C. R. BENSON, P. C.

SEPTEMBER 23, 1875.

New Orleans District, German Mission Conference.

DR. J. B. MCFERRIN—Dear Bro.: The first year under the new regime is near its close. Our Conference convenes in Galveston, Texas, on the first of December. I hope you or your associate, Dr. Kelley, will be in attendance. Notwithstanding opposition without and fears within, I was enabled to enlarge the district under my superintendence, and to enhance its material and spiritual interests.

In St. Tammany parish, in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference, where a great many Germans have settled, I opened a new field, organized a society of twenty-two members, built a church forty-one by twenty-five feet, paid for it, and dedicated it, in connection with a German camp meeting, on the eleventh of this month. We had a blessed time; nine conversions, and four additions to our church. The Rev. C. J. Wiemers, a young and gifted local preacher, is at present supplying the work.

Lake Charles mission, in Calcasieu parish, near the Sabine river, on the Texas line, I have visited once during the year. Here, too, we had some conversions and accessions.

In New Orleans we have more than held our ground. At Craps Street church a husband and wife joined our ranks on last Sunday. A love-feast at that church on last night was indeed a season of refreshing. Of Dryades Street church (my special charge) I must not speak—the report would appear to be too flattering. Soraparu Street and Carrollton churches had a little trouble with their former pastor, but are doing remarkably well nevertheless.

We are now diligently working and earnestly praying for a revival in our midst. We want all the godless for our inheritance.

Assured of your sympathy and prayers, I sign myself respectfully,
J. B. A. AHRENS.

THE human soul is hospitable, and will entertain conflicting sentiments and contradictory opinions with much impartiality.

A Suggestion About Singing.

MR. EDITOR: We have as good singing here as you will commonly find in country churches. The suggestion I wish to make will therefore apply to the average congregation. But I will first state the circumstances out of which it grows.

Our minister sometimes, and visiting ministers frequently announce a hymn thus: "We will sing the hymn on page ——. Please sing the first, third and fifth stanzas, omitting the second and fourth." The choir, if we have one—all the worse if we have not—may get the numbers right; but the majority of the people, those especially who have learned to sing by experience rather than by note, almost uniformly get things wrong, to the amusement of the young people and to the confusion of the old; for (I appeal to you, Mr. Editor) how can one worship satisfactorily to such a sentiment as this:

"The heathen in his blindness"
"In bliss reclines his native stone?"

Or how can the average young person preserve a becoming gravity while Bro. A. discusses the question over the back of his bench with Bro. B., or gesticulates frantically at Sister C., who is singing away out of place in that voice so peculiarly her own, and all unconscious of the impression she is making?

The suggestion is this: Cannot our ministers select such hymns as may be sung in whole? Or, if it is necessary to abridge, can they not get along with the first two, three or four? This would prevent mistakes.

It occurs to me that all the hymns of our collection will bear singing just as they are written; and while I admire the poetic talent in the pulpit, and especially among our younger ministers, I would suggest that it be exercised with modesty in the correction of Charles Wesley's hymns, to say nothing of the respect due to the compilers of our hymn-book and the custom of our best preachers. Brethren, please do not omit or mutilate.

PIERRE.

Roman Catholics Combining.

The evidence is accumulating, says the New York Observer, that the Roman Catholics, under the leadership of their priests, are combining to present a solid phalanx at the polls in order to elect candidates for office who will give them what they demand of the people's money, and put them in positions to further any and all of their strictly sectarian ends. The ultimate end they have in view is to obtain and exercise the power they once had in Italy and Spain and other strictly Roman Catholic countries. It is already certain that they are organizing in some States to secure their objects at the coming fall elections.

In New Jersey, where the election took place on Tuesday, September 7, they combined to defeat a constitutional amendment, the provisions of which are just and equal, forbidding the appropriation of the public funds to any society. This does not suit the Roman ecclesiastics. They wish to have access to the public treasury.

In Ohio the same element is entering largely into the canvass for the State election. In reference to the passage of a law by the last Legislature, involving a compliance with demands made by the Romanists, the Catholic Telegraph said:

"But ten thousand Catholics in the State, and twelve thousand Catholics in the city of Cincinnati, exercising their rights of suffrage, have a very strong claim upon a political party, which it will not be safe for political leaders or aspirants to political office to ignore or despise."

This is to the point, and they are now carrying this threat into execution by marking the men who will vote for their schemes, and these who will not.

All over the country they are combining to break down the public school system, in order to have the people's money appropriated to sectarian schools, by which they expect to obtain the lion's share. In a public address in Cincinnati, at a meeting at which the archbishop presided, Bishop McQuaid said:

"I stand here and say that unless we bring this thing of the school taxes to the ballot-box we do not deserve the name of Catholics. It may not be necessary to bring it to the ballot; we may, by making a demand, effect a compromise; we may obtain a platform on which we can stand. Politicians will come to us."

The American people are abundantly forewarned of the plans and designs of the Romanists. Will they be forearmed?

This subject, in its various aspects, was a prominent topic before the convention of various evangelical denominations which has been in session during the last week at Sea Grove, near Cape May. The committee appointed to prepare a paper on the subject of political Romanism, presented, through the chairman, Rev. J. S. Van Dyke, a report, which was adopted, and is as follows:

Whereas, The government of these United States is founded on a principle which recognizes the separate existence of Church and State, each distinct and relatively independent in its respective sphere;

And whereas, The Church of Rome is now forming among her people in this country organizations, under the name of "Catholic Unions," for the avowed purpose of securing, by means of the ballot, municipal and State legislation favorable to her interests, and subversive of the fundamental principles of republican government;

And whereas, The Church of Rome, with this evident purpose of subverting the free institutions of a country which has welcomed the adherents of that church, as all other immigrants are welcomed, to a free participation in our common liberty, is employing sophistry and intrigue to induce our people, and especially the professional politicians, to favor their unjust, unconstitutional and perfectly sectarian claims;

And whereas, The Church of Rome is demanding a so-called pro rata distribution of the public school funds, thereby imperilling the very existence of our time-honored system of public instruction; and is using agencies, in some instances purely political, to secure State and municipal appropriations to their asylums, churches and parochial schools, thus violating a fundamental and essential principle of our government as established by our fathers; therefore,

Resolved, That as citizens of these United States we do cordially approve and will earnestly maintain the principle which requires the separation of Church and State.

Resolved, It is with profound regret we have learned that politico-ecclesiastical societies have been organized in New Jersey and other States under the "Inspiration and blessing" of the Pope, the members of which unions are bound to render unreserved obedience to the ecclesiastical managers of these organizations.

Resolved, Believing that the perpetuity of the institutions which, under God, secure to us the enjoyment of our civil and religious liberty depends largely upon the permanency and efficiency of a well-conducted system of education, with the Bible as the standard of morals, we call upon our countrymen to resist by all legal means any and all efforts to destroy or impair the usefulness of our system of public instruction, and to unite with us in preventing State funds from being appropriated to the maintenance of sectarian institutions.

Resolved, That this convention earnestly calls upon all friends of American institutions to exert their energy and influence, in every legitimate way, to arouse the public to the necessity of resisting these aggressions, and maintaining our free institutions intact as they have been handed down to us by those who founded them upon that only true and proper basis—equal religious liberty for all; special legislation for none.

A New German Church.

MR. EDITOR: The New Orleans district, German Conference, is growing. On the twelfth of September I dedicated a new church building on the St. Tammany circuit, near Covington, La. The house is forty-one by twenty-five feet, has a high steeple with a good bell in it, is neat and commodious, and—has been paid for in full. In connection with the dedicatory service we held a German camp meeting, which was largely attended, and resulted in the conversion of nine souls and four accessions to the church. Many of our brethren exulted in the acquisition of a deeper work of grace. Twenty-three of our brethren from New Orleans accompanied us, and they all bless the Lord for his benefits. The new building has been named Bonifface church—linguistically and historically very interesting, especially to Germans. Bonifface, you know, is called the apostle of the Germans. Bros. Vickers, Grote and Wiemers rendered me valuable assistance during the meeting. Yours in love,

J. B. A. AHRENS.

Indian Mission Conference.

Drs. McFerrin and Kelley, Secretaries:

DEAR BRETHREN—The fourth round of quarterly meetings on the Cherokee district was a success. We had sixty-two accessions to the church; all professed faith in Christ; many of them bright conversions.

Bro. Cumming was with us at the Grand River quarterly meeting, his health somewhat improved, but nearly blind. Bro. Ewing was with us at the quarterly meeting held at Sehon chapel, Park Hill, in good health and spirits, his school opening with fine prospects. The preachers on the district are all at their post, laboring to the utmost of their ability. J. HARRELL.

VAN BUREN, ARK., Sept. 10, 1875.

THE Western Conference held its session at Council Grove, September 1-6. Bishop Marvin presided. G. B. Armstrong was discontinued. J. S. Cox was received by transfer. C. W. Thorpe was elected and ordained deacon; J. W. Faubion elder. L. C. Walters, located. A. Williams, superannuated. White members, 2,359; local preachers, 9. Collected for missions, $365. Next session to be held at Nebraska City.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

BABY'S LEGACY.

BY ANNA WALL.

A little soiled bonnet
And a little toeless shoe,
A dainty little stocking,
White, with hands of blue,
A little chair, not rocking
Against the nursery wall,
A doll, with broken playthings
Lay on a bed so small.

The little crumpled pillow
Upon the snowy nest
Keeps a little hollow
Which tells of sleep and rest.
The bribe—a golden dollar—
Lay on the little stand;
She drank the bitter potion,
But it added not "life's sand."

The mother thought to gather
And to store these all away;
But, no! the tender feelings,
Long pent, must now have sway.
She touched the baby boot
Which fairy foot had worn,
And smoothed the little frock
All faded, soiled and torn.

These little mute reminders,
So eloquent they were,
So fraught with life and pleasure,
Could they not linger there?
She kissed the shining ringlet
Of sunny nut-brown hair,
And thought of a little cherub
Above the "golden stair."

CENTREVILLE, Miss., August, 1875.

Centenary Female College,

SUMMERFIELD, ALA.

MR. EDITOR: For nearly forty years Summerfield has been the great center of the educational interests of Methodism in this country; and to-day her schools, though they have suffered from the impecuniosity that has pressed so heavily on every Southern enterprise, are as good, except as to numbers, as they have ever been. Rev. J. M. Crews, a graduate of the Southern University, has charge of the Male Institute, and he brings to his position all the vigor and power of a well-trained mind, and the enthusiasm of manhood's prime. His terms are wonderfully low. He is trying to see on what reduced terms he can sustain a first-class school. $158.50 is the entire expense for the year for boys. The education of girls is more expensive, but Prof. A. D. McVoy has made a large reduction in his terms, so as to bring the education of our daughters within reach of all who can send off at all. $206.50 will cover the entire expense in the literary department.

Now I venture to say that no cheaper first-class institution can be found. Then this is a remarkably healthy place—fine air, excellent water, high, rolling country, a large, commodious, imposing building and beautiful grounds. It is a fact to be regarded that the girls who come here are always pleased, contented and happy. They are watched over with parental solicitude and are in safe hands. Prof. McVoy has a superior faculty—one that cannot fail to give perfect satisfaction. Miss F. Lewis, in the music department, has achieved great success in advancing girls in vocal and instrumental music. A thorough musical education can be acquired as well here as elsewhere. Miss Lunette Johnson, at the head of the literary department, has few equals, if any, in or out of the State. She is a lady of most excellent character, grace and rare accomplishments as a teacher. The art department will be opened with a first-class teacher of art. Prof. McVoy stands at the head of his profession as a teacher. He is enthusiastic, equal to the demands of the times, an indefatigable worker, of unconquerable perseverance, ever watchful over the interests of his pupils, greatly beloved by them, popular with his patrons, and successful in his careful management of the institution. We think him just the man for the place.

Centenary is ready for increased patronage, and we confidently expect it. The educational interests of the church must be sustained, and our people ought to patronize our own schools in preference to all others, not alone because they are Methodist schools, but because they are better adapted to the wants of Methodist children. Let us keep our children in our own church by sending them to our own schools, where they will be educated into the church. Every girl or boy that goes from the Methodist Church to other institutions weakens so much the institutions of the church by giving others the patronage that should build up and strengthen our own. Our people, especially from sections whence it has the right to expect patronage, should look to no other institution than Centenary. Friends of Methodism ought to rally to this institution and fill its halls with their daughters on the first of October. I think they will find it to their interest to do so. Here they will find a healthy place and thorough teaching, where strong church influences prevail. The prospect for the ensuing session is brightening. Prof. McVoy is traveling and striving to secure a large patronage. Decide at once to send your daughters here, where we assure you they will be well cared for. On the first and second of October the president will be in Selma to receive the girls who come to Centenary, to take them out the short distance of eight miles. Those who come later will meet conveyances in Selma. It is always best to inform the president when your daughter expects to arrive in Selma.

SEPTEMBER 6, 1875.

My Experience.—No. 2.

It was on the coast of South America, in 1835, that I was wounded nigh unto death, on shipboard, by the falling of a heavy block and chain from the masthead (called the toprail tie.) When I came to my reason, with my skull broken, I promised God if he spared me that I would return to my native city (Baltimore,) and join with the Protestants (for they were not tolerated in South America then; I heard Rev. F. E. Pitts preach on a ship in Guayaquil, Ecuador, for he was not allowed to preach on shore) to serve God. I went on the first ship to New York; but, having by this time regained strength, I turned toward New Orleans, and by a strange providence was led to cross the lake into the pine woods of St. Tammany parish, where I was thrown into a Methodist family. This was in 1836. I purchased a small vessel and traded to New Orleans, but my home was on Pearl river. I addressed and married, in 1837, Miss Adelaide Stafford, whose family were Methodists. Whenever there I was held under restraint by morning and evening prayer, and reading and song. But I had worldly associates. We could not ask to frolic on the premises at the wedding, but arrangements were made at a house not far away. But to my surprise and mortification my bride declined firmly but modestly, saying she had never witnessed a dance. Her firmness at this crisis no doubt saved me from this bewitching amusement, so fruitful of worse practices, and she has never seen a dance yet. I now remained more at home; went to New Orleans occasionally. My associates were all worldly, mostly wicked men. I encountered a storm on the lake, in which we nearly foundered—were in jeopardy. I prayed as best I could while at the helm, as did also the men at the pumps. I promised again to pay my vows to God. We were saved.

About this time Rev. D. M. Wiggins came on our circuit. He, like the Master, received sinners. I was drawn to him while walking with him and a neighbor, along a narrow path, in single file—he the last of the line, myself next. I missed his voice, and turned back to see what had happened, when I found him in a thicket on his knees. I could almost hear and feel him pray for me. I was alarmed. I was on holy ground. I shrank away, not a word being spoken; but God was there. On the following Sabbath my wife joined the church. I was glad to see her start, but I was not quite ready. The next month he took for a text: "Quench not the Spirit." God sent it burning to my conscience. This had been my sin all my life. At the close I knelt for the prayers of the church, and gave my hand as a probationer, for I had settled it in my heart to serve God as long as life should last. I did not expect anybody in or out of the church to have any confidence in my act, and I do not think they had, for many hard things were said by both parties until they saw and heard my agony under conviction. I went to New Orleans about this time; suffered the circumstances to prevent my reading and prayer, so that I was off my guard; and when leaving there my men proved to be drunk and came near falling into the canal; and I had not been converted. My anger was aroused and I cursed them; ordered the vessel to be made fast, and ran down into the cabin and fell to praying in earnest, for I was very much alarmed. But the sailors were so accustomed to swearing that no person knew of it until I told it after my conversion. I saw clearly now that this wickedness must be eradicated by divine power. I sought more earnestly. I returned to New Orleans, and on Sunday morning, instead of going with my former associates, I went alone to look up the church; found the Poydras Street church, and was unknown to a soul present. I saw the sacrament on the table, and while the minister was preaching I was determining what to do, and finally concluded that, though I was not converted, God knew that I was a sincere seeker; and so I went and took it. The young men of the church followed up the stranger, spoke kindly and invited me to class meeting at Bro. Kean's, of blessed memory. Thus was I led on, by God's providence, into good and godly company. The more I saw, read and learned the greater became my conviction for sin and depravity, until I felt that the terrors of hell got fast hold of me. I found trouble and sorrow, so that I verily thought I should die and go to hell, even while I was praying. There were a few good women who had a class meeting in an old log school-house, and the thought came into my mind that if I would go there I would find the blessing. Mother Evans, as she was called by everybody, spoke to all the sisters. O how sad I felt when she passed me and remarked: "As you are a man you can speak." I could not speak. There was a pause, and then the old mother in Israel began to talk of Jesus' love for sinners; how he came to save that which was lost (I felt that I was lost;) to save the chief of sinners (I was the chief of sinners;) and how he tasted death for every man (I was a sinful man.) The whole panorama passed before me, and my heart said: He did suffer for me, and I do believe. Then my unfeeling heart melted, tears of joy came freely, I was filled with love, and I tried to tell it, and have been trying to tell it ever since. But it was singular that I did not acknowledge this as all of conversion, but sought greater assurance and power. God blessed and reblessed until I became convinced that he pardoned my sins in that old school-house; and had I then acknowledged it I might have had the evidence of God's Spirit agreeing with my spirit. But, thank God, I received it at last. (Here is the reason probably why so many cannot fix on the time and place of their change; but to have a consciousness of present acceptance is the most important.) I was told by the pastor now to assist in leading the class, and as soon as my probation was out I was appointed class-leader for two churches, seven miles apart; and as he came but once a month, and always had class after preaching, I did as he did. Everybody turned out to church. I first talked to the congregation, and then dismissed and held class meeting. We had a glorious revival, for Bro. Wiggins was beloved by all. I was happy all the time, and began to feel called to a larger work.

Yours in Christ,

J. NICHOLSON.

Meager Support.

N. CIRCUIT, Y. CONFERENCE, September 20, 1875.

MR. EDITOR: There appeared in one of your issues, a few months past, an article under the head (if my memory serves me rightly) of "A Glance at the Other Side," in which the writer spoke too truly, no doubt, tho experiences of many brethren in our connection. Too often, yet it is lamentably true, our stewards and church members are seemingly careless and indifferent as to the wants or condition of their preachers.

I only want to take a slight glance at the same picture, as viewed by the brother, by sending you a few facts.

The third quarterly meeting for our circuit is just past. When the Quarterly Conference was called to order only three out of a full board of stewards were present. (One, however, was sick.) In reply to the question on support of preachers only $11.50 was reported for the last quarter, thus making a fraction over $100—one-sixth of the whole amount assessed for the support of the pastor and presiding elder, collected up to the present time. Of course, Mr. Editor, the presiding elder must receive something from even these meager contributions. Where the pastor lives, I suppose, all the officials know; but how is a question of which they have no knowledge. How a man could support a family and horse on a sum of less than $100 is a question that would puzzle many. In fact, Mr. Editor, if it had not been for the kind assistance of a friend, who has come to the rescue in times of need, the pastor would have been compelled to seek support by some other means. It is true the times have been very hard indeed, but why should the preachers be forced to carry all the burden of the hard times upon their shoulders? None suffer so much from hard times as they. However, we are to have one other quarterly meeting before the close of the year, and now, as the cotton crop is coming into market, our brethren encourage us very much by promising to bring up a full report in the end, which, if they do, we will keep silent; if not, you may hear from us again.

Fraternally, S. C.

MANY a preacher, says Dr. Broaddus, does not know to this day that speaking to children and teaching them in Sunday school has been the making of him. Without it he would have been dry and dull. And as good books for children are delightful to grown people, so the concrete, pictorial and direct style of speaking, which is indispensable in addressing children, is a most helpful and needful thing in preaching to adults.

WHO came into office but this morning has the more orders to give.

THE ORPHAN'S PRAYER.

God of the fatherless, bend down thine ear;
God of the motherless, my prayers hear:
My cross I have taken, but 'tis hard to bear;
Alone and forsaken, I've no parent's care.

God of the fatherless, I'm a wanderer here;
God of the motherless, be thou ever near
To strengthen and guide when temptations are strong,
That I may abide with thy angel throng.

God of the fatherless, my fears allay;
God of the motherless, have mercy, I pray;
Though o'er my way clouds may appear,
Be thou the ray to draw me near.

God of salvation, I do believe;
God of mercy, my soul receive
When it shall flee to the world above.
Hear thou my plea, O God of love!

TENSAS PARISH, Louisiana.

A Christian's Experience.

On the twenty-second day of October, A. D. 1848 (Monday evening at five o'clock,) under a bush arbor, Brush Creek camp ground, Tuskaloosa county, Ala., under the ministry of Bros. McLoud and McDonald, I was happily converted to God, and I know it. I knew it then and I know it now. I know it as perfectly as I know the ministers that preached on that occasion—as perfectly as I know anything that I do know. I had evidence of the fact unmistakable.

The young man that received his sight at the Pool of Siloam knew he could see. Though the Jews endeavored to disprove the fact, the young man said: "One thing I know: that whereas I was blind, now I see." One thing I did know, and I now know I saw things as I never saw them before. When the great work was done I was for a time amazed. I looked at the people, who seemed changed. I gazed at the leaves of the forest—they were changed. All looked beautiful and happy. The songs that were being sung were so sweet! Almost at the same moment my precious mother embraced me in her arms, while her voice was lifted up with praises to God, in which I instantly joined, and soon realized that the change was in me. Oh, how happy the change—this feeling that was in my soul—and inexpressibly pleasant! My feelings were changed, my language was different. A new song was in my mouth, even praise to God.

Since that time I have never been surprised when I heard the newborn soul shout aloud the praise of God. I cannot wonder at this when I remember what a hard struggle I had to reach the desired point. The struggle was simply to cut myself loose from the pleasures of this world and give myself away.

But at this period I wonder that so many seem to find an easier way to obtain religion; but when I look into the churches and see such a host of nominal church members the question is settled.

For twenty-seven years I have been endeavoring to cultivate this blessed feeling that was given me in conversion. Bless God! All along this journey I have felt the love of God in my soul more or less. Thousands of times have I lifted up my voice aloud, giving glory to God from a feeling sense of his love shed abroad in my soul.

A few days since, while on my knees with my family, I was praying for faith to receive Christ in the soul. It was given me that moment. I saw Jesus. The same good old blessed feeling that I had in conversion came in double measure. Glory to God for this blessed work in the heart!

For several years past, and especially very recently, I felt that my heart was fixed—looking constantly to the rock that is higher than we are. I look forward with intense delight, if faithful to my trust, when I shall meet those with whom I have sung, prayed, preached and rejoiced, and also the family of heaven. Many, many have already gone over home. Glory be to God for the hope of heaven!

Yours in Christ, W. A. RAY.

OBITUARIES.

WILLIAM C. RUSH was born in Montgomery county, N. C., October 28, 1803, and departed this life, at his residence near DeKalb, Kemper county, Miss., August 18, 1875. After uniting in marriage with Miss Elizabeth Crawford, daughter of Rev. Maston Crawford, he moved to Mississippi in 1837, where he lived, honored and beloved, until his Master called him home. For twenty-five years he lived a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Pleasant Ridge, DeKalb circuit, and when his end came we all had good hope, through grace, that he was prepared to take his place in the church above. A kind Providence had blessed Bro. Rush with an abundance of the goods of this world, and with an unsparing hand he dealt them out to the poor and needy. No one ever appealed to the large-hearted William Rush and went away from his door unaided.

He was a dear lover of God's ministers, and many have been the wants of the poor itinerant together with the wants of his family, that have been supplied by this now departed brother. But he is gone from us and we miss him much. His like, I fear, we shall not see again for some time to come. "He rests from his labors, and his works do follow him." As years rolled on and brought him nearer the close of life he became more and more ripe for his change and home in heaven. This was manifest from his oft and repeated conversations with his now bereaved wife on the subject of religion and his future prospects of a better world. On a previous occasion, during a severe attack of a distressing malady to which he was subject, and when in near prospect of death, he expressed himself as being ready for the Master's call; and just a short time before his last illness he was made happier than usual at a protracted meeting, while the writer of this was preaching.

In the death of William Rush the country has lost a valuable citizen, the church a warm friend and supporter, and his family a good husband and kind father.

A. J. COLEMAN.

MRS. MEDORA E. ECHOLS, wife of Mr. John H. Echols, died in Jackson, Miss., August 29, 1875, after a long and painful illness. She joined the Methodist Church in June, 1866, under the ministry of Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, and continued in its communion until death translated her to the church triumphant. She was a dutiful child, loving wife and tender mother. The last years of her earthly life were full of suffering. For some months she was constantly confined to bed, and saw her flesh day by day waste from the bones; yet during this long, trying illness she manifested a Christian patience of no ordinary type. She was enabled to illustrate the truth of the Scripture that God doeth all things well, and that "all things work together for good to them that love God." In her earlier sickness our sister was not satisfied with her religious state. She did not have the bright evidence of her acceptance with God that she so much desired; but some three weeks before death she became perfectly reconciled to the will of God, and expressed herself as ready to die whenever the summons should come. She enjoyed the fullness of the divine presence, and without fear met the last enemy. With clear and strong voice she uttered these words to her pastor: "It is immaterial whether I die or get well. God knows best, and he will take care of mine when I am gone." She requested many of her friends and relatives to meet her in the better land. And in this frame of mind she continued until the weary wheels of life stood still, and the freed spirit sped home to God and heaven. May the bereaved ones remember her dying faith, and all meet again in the "sweet by-and-by."

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

DIED, in Forkland, Greene county, Ala., September 13, 1875, after many days' suffering and infirmity of age, SARAH GARRETT, aged sixty-seven years and six months. The deceased was born in Edgecombe county, N. C., in 1808, and moved to Greene county, Ala., in 1830, where she lived until her death. In 1826 she was united in the holy bonds of matrimony, and lived a long wedded life of forty-nine years. She early professed faith in Christ, and in 1848 she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and maintained a consistent Christian character. The writer visited her during her sickness, and always found her ready to give evidence of the hope that was in her, and she demonstrated in her sufferings and death the glorious change that had been wrought in her heart and mind by divine grace. Her lamp seemed to be always trimmed—grew brighter and brighter to the day of death. She leaves behind to mourn her loss a husband and seven children, and meets five in the spirit land. She raised a large family of children, and she had the pleasure of seeing them all in the church before she died, and most of them live to bless the church and community in which they reside. Sister Garrett loved her church and her doctrines, but this world was not her home. God had a place for her in the mansions above, where she is numbered now among the church triumphant in heaven. We laid her slumbering form away to rest, through the flitting years to come, in the old church-yard of Forkland, Ala.

J. S. FRAZER.

THE subject of this notice, Bro. G. H. WESTBROOK, was born in the State of Georgia, July 12, 1807, and was converted and joined the Lutheran Church in 1817. In 1856 he united himself with the Methodist Protestant Church at Caney Creek, Smith county, Miss., of which he continued a faithful member until his death, which occurred in great peace, March 21, 1875. From the time of his conversion till he was called to his rest Father Gillam, as he was familiarly called, was a pure, consistent Christian, never swerving from the path of duty, cherishing in heart and demonstrating in his life the power of Christianity to satisfy the soul and correct the life. So fully did his religion meet the demands of his heart that through long years of excruciating physical torture he was known by all as the most cheerful one of the family. He loved to talk about God and heaven, and never tired of exhorting his loved ones to meet him in the home of rest to which he was going.

J. B. K. SMITH, P. C.

THE following preamble and resolutions were adopted by the Triune Sabbath school in reference to the death of ISADORE H., son of C. H. and M. T. Cloyd, who died at his father's residence, in Caldwell parish, La., on the twelfth of August, A. D. 1875, aged eight years, six months and twenty days:

Whereas, The Triune Sabbath school acknowledge and recognize the fact that in life we are in the midst of death, and that Isadore truly obeyed his parents in the Lord; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of our beloved scholar we have sustained a loss that we deeply deplore, yet we bow submissively to this dispensation of divine will.

Resolved, That this Sabbath school hereby tender our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family of the deceased in the irreparable loss which they have sustained, and admonish them to remember that the Lord doeth all things well, and that the Lord gave and he taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord.

TRIUNE CHURCH, August 22, 1875.

DIED, in Tensas parish, La., August 4, 1875, of swamp fever, little INCE, oldest child and only daughter of Dr. T. H. and L. W. Maddux, aged six years.

Little Ince was not only a comfort to her parents, but the pride of all who knew her. Though she was but a child, she lived in a sphere far beyond those of her age. Having no children to associate with, she made her father and mother her companions, who, being good people, possessed with high culture and Christian benevolence, reared this beautiful child to the tender age of six with much learning, and with a high appreciation of the things that tend to spiritual good; and, though she knew she was dying, she felt no fear at the thought of meeting her God. She knew there was a God, for she had been taught to love, honor and pray to him.

H.

VICTOR WENN, son of M. A. and Annie T. Clark, died of congestion, at his father's residence in Kosciusko, Attala county, Miss., September 1, A. D. 1875, aged five years. Victor was baptized by Rev. F. M. Featherstun, presiding elder, in infancy, was a regular member of the Methodist Sabbath school at Kosciusko, and from the time he could talk distinctly up to two days before his death he said his prayers every night before retiring. He is now with the angels in heaven.

M. A. CLARK.

SAMUEL BASKETT departed this life September 14, 1875, in Jasper county, Miss. He was born January 18, 1860. He was not a member of the church, but was a very moral youth. None knew him but to love him, and we trust now that he is living in the sunlight of God's eternal love. May God comfort his afflicted family and friends.

T. Y. ARMSTRONG.

AMMER OLIVIA GOTTSCHALL, infant daughter of Augustus and Mary E. Gottschall, died in the town of Jackson, La., September 14, 1875, aged two years and three months.

DIED, in Trenton, Smith county, Miss., July 27, 1875, HERBERT, infant son of W. J. and Nola R. Bell, aged seven months and twenty-seven days.

DIED, September 12, 1875, in Tuskegee, Ala., FELIX TAIT, infant son of Rev. Henry D. and Carrie T. Moore.

UNCONSCIOUS SKEPTICISM.—We believe it is Dr. Holland who has said, in his own choice words, that a conviction may slip into one's life as unconsciously as a cork within a bottle, and that thus it may no more form a part of the life than the cork of the bottle; only the presence of it is known by the souring of the liquid. A skeptical thought may be thus destroying all the sweetness of a believer's life—a silent, unconscious presence in the soul, turning all its strength and goodness into insipid or bitter substitute; a conviction whose existence is only denoted by its evil effects upon the inner heart. The easy, compromising way in which a pernicious thought is often dealt with grows into actual excuse for it after a time, and bold defense of it in the end. The conviction does not make itself manifest at once, more than the cork did. See that these dangerous tendencies are anticipated by all.—Methodist Recorder.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1875.

RESPECTFULLY DECLINED.

I made a song, a little song,
Once sitting 'neath the moon;
'Twas sweet as sings the nightingale
To please the rose of June;
The very soul of melody
Was in each tuneful line—
I never heard a lay that had
A witchery like mine.
To hide it in my heart, I said,
Would be a selfish thing—
The world in future years must have
My little song to sing!
So, tenderly, with loving care,
I sent my song away—
'Twill bring me back not olive leaves,
I thought, but wreaths of bay;
My little song flew here and there,
A resting-place to find,
But homeless it came back to me:
"Respectfully declined!"
Oh, hard and cruel souls must be
The guardians of the press;
They wear the human form, but they
Are Gorgons, none the less;
For if they were not hard of heart,
As well as slow of mind,
They never had sent back my song:
"Respectfully declined!"

The Proverbs of India.

The proverbs of India far exceed those of Solomon in number, and many of them quite rival his in wit and wisdom. I will give a selection. They speak for themselves. Some of them lose a little in rhyme or pungency by translation. There are many more which would be of little point away from Indian customs and ideas. As "a man is known by the company he keeps," so a land may be known by its proverbs, if we bear in mind that there are some sayings unpublished.

Missionaries gain a greater hold upon the natives when they can use their proverbs as our Lord applied the sayings of the Jews of his day. Thus the depth of human depravity, so well illustrated by the "Ethiopian's skin," is best presented to the Hindoostani by one of the proverbs of the Hitopadesha: "Charcoal parts not with its blackness in a hundred washings." "Even by a hundred efforts a crane cannot be made to talk like a parrot," or, more pithily, "Pounding an ass to make him a horse." Allied to this is "Thrashing the chaff," illustrating the inability of the soul to sanctify itself. The need of the help of the Holy Spirit to see the truth may be taught by quoting: "What is the use of a looking-glass to a person without eyes?" We may hint the needs of their Brahmins and Gurus by suggesting: "Blind torch-bearers," "The bullock's house is out of repair," or "Oil your own wheel first." These seem scarcely original, so nearly are they like our Lord's "Blind leaders of the blind," and "Mote and beam" illustrations. Hypocrisy is "Rubbing the thighs with bran and calling one's self corn dealer" (the dealer sits upon his mat with the grain heaped up beside him).

Vanity is thus put: "If I must die, I must die; but do not touch my top-knot, as the peacock said." Our "pot calling the kettle black" runs thus: "The sieve said to the needle, What a large hole you have!" Contentment is taught in the Bengalese proverb: "When the bed breaks, there's the floor to lie on." Also "Content is covered with the Sheshia leaf, but for discontent a phutain will not suffice." "Too high is broken by the wind, too low is eaten by the goats." The Hitopadesha has many wise sayings upon this and similar subjects: "From covetousness anger proceeds; from covetousness last is born; from covetousness come delusion and perdition; covetousness is the cause of sin." "The wealth of the miser consists in being able to say: This is mine." "He whose days pass without giving or enjoying, though he may breathe like the bellows of a blacksmith, yet he does not live." Retribution is found in many sayings, as "Jaisa karna, walsa bharna," "As the doing, so the getting." "Jo booge, wuhi katoge," literally, "What you sow, that shall you cut" (reap.) With these is found the idea of atonement: "Like sin, like atonement." "The profits of sin are spent in atonement." Ingratitude is pictured in the Bengalese: "Having eaten your rice, the eater attacks you," and "When the work is done, the carpenter is a rascal," or the Sanskrit sloka, "What further use of the boat when you have crossed the stream?"

From the sublime let us turn to the domestic. "If you want a good pot, sound it first; if you want a good wife, know her first." "Caulk a new boat, heat a new wife," would make one shudder, but it is met by "Prop up an old house, cherish an old wife." We have known some more "enlightened" people to reverse this order. Here is a sweet sentiment: "One's own home is always the pleasantest, and she is loveliest whom one loves best." Here is a contrast: "The mind of the mother-in-law is as uneasy as peas on a brass plate." "If a man runs after a woman he falls into marriage; if a woman runs after a man she falls into ruin." "Good soil gives good grain—a good husband makes a good wife." "Half-grown grain wants the rain—to her with child be soft and mild." "He who cultivates an old joom will have much weeding; he who marries a widow will have to pay her debts."

The drinking customs of the age are suggested: "An old house wants props—an old man wants drops." "An ax is spoiled by the knots in the wood—a man is ruined by the glasses he swallows." A relative in slavery is "a thorn under the nail" to the frontier tribes.

"A dog is disliked for his teeth, a man for his tongue." "In jungle scrub the castor-tree (ten feet high) is king." "Any knife is sharp among potatoes." "It is dark under the lamp" is akin to our erroneous proverb about preachers' sons.

The Hitopadesha has many beautiful proverbs: A false flatterer is "a jar of poison with a surface of milk." "The serpent is adorned with a jewel, still is he not dangerous?" "One should not form friendship with one of evil character; charcoal, if hot, burns—if cold, blackens the hands." "One of evil character is like a pot of clay, easily broken, but reunited with difficulty; while a good man is like a vessel of gold, difficult to be broken and may be easily joined again."

Great Men Good Sleepers.

Napoleon at St. Helena censured what he called historical silliness (niaiseries) on the part of historians who judged ill of men and events. "It was wrong, for example, to expatiate on the calmness of Alexander, Cæsar and others for having slept on the eve of a battle. There are none of our soldiers, of our generals, who have not repeated this marvel twenty times, and nearly all the heroism lay in the foregoing fatigue." M. DeSegur describes him passing the night before Wagram, within reach of the enemy, on the alert, the horse bridled.

"The Emperor slept in the middle of his guard. A spread mantle served him for tent. He slept under it scarcely three or four hours, but as profoundly as usual. It was necessary to wake him in the morning. This will excite no astonishment if we reflect that at these critical moments history shows us hardly any great men without sleep or appetite; not that robust health is indispensable to these great actions, but rather because they require elevated and firm characters which maintain their calm."

Conde was an excellent sleeper; so was the Duke of Wellington; so was Pitt, till his health became fatally shattered; and the power or habit is quite as essential in civil as in military affairs, for without it both mind and body must prove unequal to a strain. One striking exception was Nelson, who, when everything was ready for the attack on Copenhagen, and he was only waiting for a wind, was with difficulty persuaded to attempt an hour or two of rest. He allowed his cot to be placed on deck and lay down on it, but never closed his eyes a moment, and at brief intervals during some hours kept anxiously inquiring about the wind. Napoleon or Wellington would have ordered himself to be called when the wind was favorable and gone quietly to sleep. Yet Nelson was a hero in the brightest acceptation of the word.

"The fiery spirit, working out its way,
Fretted the puny body to decay."

At Wagram there was a time when the French left was routed, and the artillery at Boudet taken. Intelligence of this disaster and of the threatening advance of the Austrian right to operate on the French rear being brought by one of Massena's aides-de-camp, the Emperor remained silent, impassive, as if he had heard nothing, with looks fixed on the opposite side, on Neusiedl and Davoust. It was not till he saw the fire of Davoust, and his victorious right wing pass the high tower of this village, that he turned to the aide-de-camp: "Bondet's artillery is taken. Well, it was there to be taken. Go and tell Massena that the battle is won." It was then far from won; a desperate effort was required to redeem it, and he was obliged to order up his reserve, to which he never resorted except in the last emergency.

Having given this order, confident of its execution by Lauriston, Davoust and d'Aboville, and sure of its effect, tranquilized, moreover, by the progress of Davoust and our right wing, Napoleon alighted, and that which will astonish, but is certain, is that, calling Rustan (the Mameluke,) he caused his bearskin to be spread out, stretched himself upon it and fell into a deep sleep! This sleep had already lasted nearly twenty minutes, and was beginning to create disquiet, when he awoke without surprise, without eagerness, to know what had come to pass during this absence of consciousness. We could even see by the direction of his first look, and by the orders which he redoubled, that he resumed or rather followed his train of thought as if it had undergone no interruption.—Memoirs of Count de Segur, in Quarterly Review.

The Bread from Heaven.

No doubt the words were difficult, and, to those who came in a hard and false spirit, offensive; no doubt also the death and passion of our Savior Christ, and the mystery of that holy sacrament, in which we spiritually eat his flesh and drink his blood, has enabled us more clearly to understand his meaning; yet there was in the words which he had used enough, and more than enough, to shadow forth to every attentive hearer the great truth, already familiar to them from their own law, that "man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God;" and the further truth that eternal life—the life of the soul—was to be found in the deepest and most intimate of all conceivable communions with the life and teaching of him who spake. And it must be remembered that if the Lord's Supper has, for us, thrown a clearer light upon the meaning of this discourse, on the other hand the metaphors which Jesus used had not, to an educated Jew, one hundredth part of the strangeness which they have to us. Jewish literature was exceedingly familiar with the symbolism which represented by "eating" an entire acceptance of and incorporation with the truth, and by "bread" a spiritual doctrine. Even the mere pictorial genius of the Hebrew language gave the clew to the right interpretation. Those who heard Christ in the synagogue of Capernaum must almost involuntarily have recalled similar expressions in their own prophets; and since the discourse was avowedly parabolic—since Jesus had expressly excluded all purely sensual and Judaic fancies—it is quite clear that much of their failure to comprehend him rose not from the understanding, but from the will. His saying was hard, as St. Augustine remarks, only to the hard, and incredible only to the incredulous. For if bread be the type of all earthly sustenance, then the "bread of heaven" may well express all spiritual sustenance—all that involves and supports eternal life. Now the lesson which he wished to teach them was this: that eternal life is in the Son of God. They, therefore, that would have eternal life must partake of the bread of heaven, or, to use the other and deeper image, must eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man. They must feed on him in their hearts by faith. They might accept or reject the truth which he was revealing to their consciences, but there could be no possible excuse for their pretended inequality to understand its meaning.—Farrar.

Fox-Hunting and Science.

Sir Roderick I. Murchison was recognized throughout the world as one of the most distinguished geologists of the present century. In his classification and arrangement of the Silurian system he in fact laid the foundation of the methods of classifying and describing the various formations which have been continued by the geologists of all countries. Yet he came very near never being anything more than a reckless English fox-hunting squire. He seems to have been rather wild at school; active and venturesome in the army; an enthusiastic hunter, proud of his stud of horses, and inclined to a taste for "horse talk;" and withal a desultory dabbler in art and archæology. All of a sudden, when thirty years old, he became converted into a diligent student of science. How this came about is told in his own words, quoted in Geike's biography:

"As time rolled on I got blase and tired of all fox-hunting life. In the summer following the hunting season of 1822-23, when revisiting my old friend Morritt, of Rokeby, I fell in with Sir Humphry Davy, and experienced much gratification in his lively illustration of great physical truths. As we shot partridges together in the morning I perceived that a man might pursue philosophy without abandoning field sports; and Davy, seeing that I had already made observations on the Alps and Apennines, independently of my antiquarian rambles, encouraged me to come to London and set to at science by attending lectures on chemistry, etc. As my wife naturally backed up this advice, and Sir Humphry said he would soon get me into the Royal Society, I was fairly and easily hooked."

He sold his horses and went to London to study chemistry. This study did not suit him, being too sedentary, while he was of an active disposition. Then his attention was turned to geology, and his favor gained for it, as a science which, needing much observation in the field, would offer an easy outlet for his physical activity, and came nearest to his old field sports in the opportunity it afforded for open-air exercise. On the invitation of Dr. Buckland he visited Oxford, where he had the opportunity of hearing the lectures of the professor, and also of joining in one of his field excursions. This excursion determined Murchison's career. He determined to observe for himself, and, hackling on his geological hammer for the first time, he started on a tour along the south coast, accompanied by his wife. From this time forth he threw himself into his new science with the same ardor which had been displayed in his field sports; and each season he started on some fresh campaign which would furnish him with materials for his winter's work. The record of these geological journeys at home and abroad naturally forms the bulk of Murchison's memoirs.

From a careful article in the Brooklyn Eagle, on the choirs and choir music of the City of Churches, we learn that there are in that city two hundred and twenty-five churches, whose aggregate expenditure for music is annually $170,850, or an average of about $750 to each church. The most expensive choir costs about $8,000, the next $6,000, the next $5,000, and so they run down the scale to nearly nothing. Bassos, sopranos, contraltos, organists and precentors have their fixed values, just as the preachers have, and change from choir to choir with a considerable degree of liveliness about the first of May. Some musicians hold their connection with church choirs for a long series of years, but the tenure of others is very uncertain, depending somewhat on the whims of musical committees and of congregations, and partly on offers of additional salary with which singers and players on instruments are sometimes tempted from church to church. Much of the expensive music of Brooklyn and of New York is worth paying for, but there is, on the other hand, much which is not worth paying for at any price, as an aid to devotion. Some of the best is that which costs the least cash.

A Good Church Member.—He believes in his church. He loves it. He gives himself to it. He prays for it, and speaks kindly of it. He does not put a stumbling-block in the way of his brethren, and avoids those things which may grieve them or cause them to offend. He is charitable in his judgments and promotes peace. He feels it a duty to build up his own congregation rather than another congregation. He cheers his brethren and his pastor by regular attendance upon the public services. He helps the pastor, and does not leave him to preach to empty pews with an aching heart, or to carry on the prayer meetings alone. It is no slight excuse that keeps him from the Lord's Supper. The appointments of his church and the memory of his Savior are sacred to him. He does not trifle with either. He does not long continue derelict in duty to the church, so as to become liable to discipline. He keeps his covenant, solemnly made with his church when he entered its fellowship. God bless our good members, old and young, and constantly increase their number! Let lively stones be laid into the spiritual temple.—The Reformed Church Herald.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Bishop of Manchester has emphatically set his veto on rattling at religious fairs in England.

—Negotiations between Russia and the Vatican in relation to the Russian Catholic Church have been abandoned for the present.

—The Arabs made an attack on the English Palestine exploration party recently, near Acre, wounding the leader, Lieut. Conder.

—The Pope has written a letter to the Archbishop of Naples, mathematizing the new organization known as the National Catholic Church.

—The Bible Society has manufactured during the year, at the Bible House, New York, 742,366 copies of the Scriptures, and its issues during the fifty-nine years of its existence amount to the portly number of 31,893,332.

—A well-attended conference on Christian literature was held at Allahabad on the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth of February, to consider what steps should be taken for increasing the supply of Urdu and Hindi Christian literature. The various tract, Bible, mission and publishing societies were represented.

—The London Watchman contains the following: "The Italo-American Methodists in Rome have just paid a large sum for a very eligible plot of building ground on the Piazzi Poli, next to the Church of the Crocitieri, upon which they propose to build a chapel. There will be only a partition wall between the Roman and the Methodist churches."

—At the recent London Presbyterian council the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists were among the brethren acknowledged heartily as worthy a place in the Alliance. Their moderator, Rev. J. Williams, spoke for them, and said that they "had one hundred thousand members, and a thousand churches, and a very great debt—the debt being significant of activity."

—British cruisers are busy doing for the eastern coast of Africa the work which was formerly necessary on the west coast. The slaves rescued from a number of Arab dhows have been settling on the Seychelles Islands, in the Indian ocean. The Church Missionary Society has sent one of its agents thither, in order to look after the spiritual interests of the freed slaves.

—Dean Stanley has done another unconventional thing in inviting the Pan-Presbyterian Synod to visit and go over the Jerusalem Chamber. The dean did not fail to point out the reason of this act of liberality. It was in that chamber that Presbyterian divines of 1645 sat and drew up the Westminster Confession, which is to this day the standard of Presbyterian orthodoxy.

—The missions of the Reformed Church are carried on in China at Amoy, in India in the Arcot district, in Japan at Yokohama and Yedo. There are 11 stations, 15 missionaries, 19 assistant missionaries, 6 native ministers, 55 catechists and Bible readers, 36 school teachers, 25 churches and 1,360 communicants. The missionary physicians treated 11,301 patients during 1874.

—There was a meeting in Pittsburg, Pa., a short time since, of persons "who believe that railroad traffic on the Sabbath, especially the running of freight trains, is contrary to the law of God and the fundamental law of the land, and injurious to all the best interests of the individual and of society." It is their intention to prosecute the offending corporations for violating the State laws regarding Sabbath observance.

—Maj. G. W. Ingalls, a Baptist missionary agent, reports that at the late General Council of Indians at Okmulgee, where twenty-nine wild tribes were represented, the chief of one of the tribes said: "We want preachers who will have meetings and Sunday schools for us, who can instruct and teach us the words of the great spirit." Maj. Ingalls was personally importuned to secure missionaries (Baptist, of course) to labor among these Indians.

—The constitution adopted by the Presbyterian Council has been made public. The name given the new union is "Alliance of Reformed Churches Throughout the World." All churches are included which hold to the Presbyterian system and creed. The preamble of the constitution recites the objects of the Alliance, which are to demonstrate unity of belief among Protestants, organize mission work, promote educational and social reforms, and oppose infidelity and religious intolerance.

—We clip from an exchange the following: "A Wesleyan missionary in the Island of Ceylon has bought an idol temple and the grove in which it stood, as well as the idol itself. Having completed the purchase from the Brahmin owner, the missionary put the idol into his coat-pocket and walked away, instead of dropping dead, as the horrified worshipers expected to see him do. It happened to be the god Vyravan, who is the guardian of the other gods, and the seizure of his image, removal of his temple and grove, and the erection of a school on the sacred spot, has created an unusual stir among the people of Calalty."

—Two or three years ago the Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Canada sent forth its first party of foreign missionaries. The empire of Japan was chosen as their field of labor. Their safe arrival at Yokohama and the conversion of two native moonshies, whom they had employed to assist them in the acquisition of the Japanese language, were duly noticed heretofore. We have now the pleasure of reporting still greater success. From communications just to hand from Canada, under date of June 23, we learn that Rev. Messrs. Cochran and Macdonald have baptized thirty-five native converts since they commenced their labors in Japan, and that some of these are already so far advanced in Christian knowledge and experience as to be usefully employed in preaching the gospel to their fellow-countrymen.

Our Young People.

PRETTY IS THAT PRETTY DOES.

The sphinx wears a plain brown dress,
And she is a steady spinner;
To see her, quiet as a mouse,
Going about her silver house,
You would never, never, never guess
The way she gets her dinner!

She looks as if no thought of ill
In all her life had stirred her;
But while she moves with careful tread
And while she spins her silken thread,
She is planning, planning, planning still
The way to do some murder.

My child who reads this simple lay
With eyes down-dropt and tender,
Remember the old proverb says
That pretty is as pretty does,
And that worth dies not go nor stay
For poverty nor splendor.

From Our Little Friends.

SEPTEMBER 11, 1875.

Mr. Editor: I am a little boy, and a friend to the Advocate. I read it regularly, through the kindness of a good lady who is one of your subscribers.

Grandpa Goodale has created a great deal of excitement among us children. I may have missed some of the numbers of the Advocate since he commenced his stories, though I don't think I have. I wish to know what a "boys' nest" is. Now, sir, I know what a "hornet's nest" is, and a "bee gum," and a "yellow jacket's nest," but I never heard of a "boys' nest." If Grandpa Goodale will not let us know how Barney milked the boys' nest, will he in his next tell us boys what a boys' nest is, and perhaps we will be patient until he can finish his stories? Your friend,

Charlie B. White.

Beech Grove, Sept. 9, 1875.

Dear Mr. Editor: We little folks are in great trouble up here in Louisiana about Grandpa Goodale. What has become of him? He does not say a word to us now. Mr. Editor, please tell him to tell us "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest" before cold weather comes on.

Mr. Hoentt is our preacher this year. I like him very much. He helps me to sing "Come to Jesus," and talks to me about Jesus. We cannot go to Sunday school like your little girls in the city, but we have good preaching, and we all like to go to church and bring the preacher home with us. The Advocate is a welcome visitor at our house. We feel lonely without it—so many interesting pieces in the Child's Corner to read. I must close.

From your little friend,

Carrie R.

How Children Quarrel.

Jeanette's mother had bought a new cloak "all covered thick with spangles," so the little girl informed her friend Bertha as they were going to school one morning.

"My mother's having her old one made over," replied Bertha; "but she isn't going to put any spangles on it; they're too high."

"My mother's cloak shines be-an-ti-ful-ly," remarked Jeanette, proudly.

Bertha's mother's cloak didn't shine at all. Moreover, it was not destined to shine, as the little girl knew all too well. She had heard them say at home, on the day before, that the old galloon trimming must go on again. For a moment she was speechless, overwhelmed.

Only for a moment, however. Her spirits were something like India rubber—always ready for a bound.

"My mother's handsome enough without spangles," said she in a satisfied tone.

"So's mine," replied Jeanette, warmly.

"Mine's prettier."

"Oh, what a story!"

"She is. She's got the prettiest eyes."

"Why, Bertha Kent, my mother's eyes are just as jet black as they can be."

Bertha hadn't the least idea of the color of her mother's eyes. She only knew that they were good eyes, pleasant to look upon.

"I don't care," she said with spirit, "my mother's eyes are the best, and she never wears spectacles either."

"That's nothing. Some kinds of spectacles are stylish. Aunt Hattie says so."

Bertha didn't know what "stylish" meant, so she did not attempt to dispute that point.

"My mother's hair is the prettiest anyway, and she doesn't have to tie it on either."

Her tone seemed to admit of no contradiction. Nevertheless, she had it.

"Hair that ties on is a great deal nicer."

"O—h! I don't believe it."

"It is. Aunt Hattie says you can't make your head look real stylish without something tied on."

Again that word. Bertha's mother never talked of what was stylish. She sometimes spoke of what was pretty, but more often of what was serviceable. So, as I said before, the little girl's mind had been allowed to remain in a lamentable state of ignorance upon this very important matter.

"Well," said she, after a pause, "my mother's got the handsomest face at any rate."

"O—h, she hasn't."

"She has."

"She hasn't either."

"She has too."

Both little girls were becoming angry. I do not know what might have been the result of the discussion if Charlie Winslow hadn't happened along just then. He was whistling very loud, but that did not prevent his hearing the excited voices of his little schoolmates. He stopped.

"What's the matter?"

"Isn't my mother prettier than hers?"

"Hasn't mine got the handsomest eyes?"

"Isn't my mother's face the prettiest?"

"Don't you think hair that grows on your head is the best?"

Charlie laughed.

"Which mother do you think is the prettiest?" inquired Jeanette, impatiently.

"Mine," replied Charlie, puckering up his lips for another whistle.

"But we weren't talking about yours," said Bertha.

"No," explained Jeanette; "we're talking of our two mothers—hers and mine. Which of them do you think is the prettiest?"

"Mine," replied the young gentleman, decisively; "she's twice as handsome as either of 'em." Then he puckered up his lips again and walked off.

Jeanette and Bertha looked at each other.

"I don't see how he can think his mother's pretty," said Jeanette.

"Nor I either," replied Bertha; "some of her teeth grow crossways."

"And her nose is kinder crooked."

"So it is."

"She never does her hair up any sort of a way."

"She's only got a little spec too."

"How funny of him to say she's handsome."

Both the children laughed heartily, forgetting their own dispute in their amusement.

"She's good, though," said Bertha, at length. "Don't you remember when Robbie Lennox cut himself with that knife how she tied his finger up and gave him an apple?"

"Yes, I know; and she plays all sorts of nice games with Charlie after supper. He has a good time."

"P-r-aps so."

There was a thoughtful pause.

"P-r-aps all the boys and girls think their mothers are pretty."

"P-r-aps they do."

Another pause.

"P-r-aps that's the reason we think our mothers are the prettiest."

"P-r-aps 'tis."

"But my mother is very handsome, truly."

"So's mine."

"Come over this afternoon, and we'll cut out some waterproofs for our dolls. Mother's got a great piece left," said Jeanette, abruptly changing the subject.

Bertha promised. Peace was fully restored. Both felt that the disputed question had somehow settled itself, and both were satisfied with the decision.—Mary C. Bartlett, in the Christian Register.

Scowling.—Don't scowl; it spoils faces. Before you know it your forehead will resemble a small railroad map. There is a grand trunk line now from your cowlick to the bridge of your nose, intersected by parallel lines running east and west, with curves arching your eyebrows; and O how much older you look for it! Scowling is a habit that steals upon us unawares. We frown when the light is too strong and when it is too weak. We tie our brows into a knot when we are thinking, and knit them even more tightly when we cannot think. There is no denying there are plenty of things to scowl about. The baby in the cradle frowns when something fails to suit. "Constitution scowl," we say. The little toddler who likes sugar on his bread and butter tells his trouble in the same way when you leave the sugar off. "Cross," we say about the children, and "worried to death," about the grown folks, and, as for ourselves, we can't help it. But we must. Its reflex influence makes others unhappy; for face answereth unto face in life as well as in water. It belies our religion. We should possess our souls in such peace that it will reflect itself in placid countenances. If your forehead is ridged with wrinkles before forty, what will it be at seventy? There is one consoling thought about these marks of time and trouble—the death-angel almost always erases them. Even the extremely aged in death often wear a smooth and peaceful brow, thus leaving our last memories of them calm and tranquil. But our business is with life. Scowling is a kind of silent scolding. It shows that our souls need sweetening. For pity's sake, let us take a sad iron, or a glad iron, or smoothing tool of some sort, and straighten these creases out of our faces before they become indelibly engraved upon our visage.—Christian at Work.

Different Kinds of Pennies.—A boy who had a pocket full of cents dropped one into the missionary box, laughing as he did so. He had no thought in his heart about Jesus, the heathen or the missionary. His was a tin penny. It was as light as a scrap of tin.

Another boy put in a penny, and looked around with a self-applauding gaze. His was a brass penny. Not the gift of a lowly heart, but of a proud spirit.

A third boy gave a penny, saying to himself: "I suppose I must, because all others do." That was an iron penny. It was the gift of a cold, selfish heart.

As a fourth boy dropped his cent in the box he shed a tear, and his heart said: "Poor heathens! I am sorry they are so poor, so ignorant and so miserable." That was a silver penny, the gift of a heart full of pity.

But there was a scholar who gave his cent with a throbbing heart, saying to himself: "For thy sake, O loving Jesus, I give this, hoping that it may be the means of some good to those who have never heard of thee." That was the golden penny, because it was the gift of love.

Little Alice was crying bitterly, and, on being questioned, confessed to having received a slap from one of her play-fellows. "You should have returned it," unwisely said the questioner.

"Oh, I returned it before," said the little girl.

No entertainment is so cheap as reading, nor any pleasure so lasting.

Sorrowing Not as Others.

Not after the manner of the heathen, who were without a clear revelation of the future life, and who never thought of the resurrection. The frantic demonstrations and the despairing grief were in accord with the condition of those who were without Christ, "having no hope, and without God in the world." Sorrow is not rebuked altogether by the admonition: "That ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." Only the sorrow is not to be such as the pagan feels, and the manifestation is not to be after the manner of those who have no assurance of immortality.

The parting of death is very brief, and, if this be the main sorrow, it should be little more than that which is occasioned by many of the separations in the order of our earthly experience. We remember how a Christian lady, many years ago, when she impressed the last kiss upon the forehead of her dead husband, said: "Good-by for a little while!" She felt that the separation was only for a brief space, that her husband slept in Jesus, and that the time of meeting could not be distant. If we have a real faith in the immortality of the soul, and in the conscious unbroken being and happiness of our friends who have been called away, it is hardly possible that we should give the rein to grief. There will be sorrow, but it will be modified, restrained and mixed with comfort and hope. It is not uncommon, however, to witness those extremes of anguish and paroxysms of overwhelming emotion which seem to ignore the doctrine of the resurrection and the life.

Christians do not always realize the power of the world to come so as to habitually feel that their citizenship is in heaven. They have allowed themselves to become almost completely absorbed in the things that are seen, while the unseen world has become less real, and has become removed from the sphere of daily thought and contemplation. The ties of kindred, especially those of the family circle, have grown stronger with the passing years, while the thought that they are all temporary and doomed to be broken has been carefully repelled, or only tolerated as a dim and undefined possibility. Parents have drifted into the unconscious idolatry of living for their children rather than for God, and of finding their supreme delight in this precious, but still earthly and inferior, relationship. The rapt gaze has been toward the earth—its plans and enterprises—and the soul has ceased to look at the things which are not seen. Perhaps we have fixed the orderings of Providence to suit our own notions. Long life is a matter of course; parents are to be gathered first, and "in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in in his season." The children are to grow up to be the pride and stay of their parents, and everything is to be adjusted according to our own views of what is most fitting and desirable. Death can hardly come at any time without a shock, but when it comes to reverse our plans, and to turn our ways upside down, and to take away the idols of our hearts, its presence is absolutely paralyzing. To live with little reference to the heavenly world, and with scarcely any admission of the uncertainties of the present life, is to place ourselves in a position utterly unarmed and defenseless when the strange and dreadful invader comes. If we live like heathen, with no clear and habitual realization of eternal things, we shall also sorrow as others which have no hope.

Our Christian faith should not only triumph over death so as to expel the fear of it from our own breast, but it should be victorious over everything that is most distressing in our sorrow for those who have died. It is in the house of mourning, and by the side of the coffin, and by the new-made grave, that we are to respond from the depths of our souls to the declaration that Christ "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." With Christ strongly held, and clearly apprehended as "the resurrection and the life," there will be sorrow, but it will be sorrow mingled with hope. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

The distinguishing line between believers and unbelievers, between Christians and heathen, is exhibited in their sorrow. It is, of course, marked in the character and life, in every relation and pursuit where moral and spiritual distinctions are possible. In the ordinary vocations—the business and the recreations—the spirit and tone of purity and heavenly-mindedness are manifest in the children of God: But they have a testimony to deliver in their very bereavements. Their sorrow is to stand out in contrast to the sorrow of others, even in stronger relief than their works. Here, in the darkest and most trying passages of human experience, their light is to shine with peculiar splendor and in convincing power. They are to show to the world that there is a reality in the religion of Christ, that it means living for eternity, that it is victory over death, and that they have a strong consolation who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before them. Nowhere are the fruits of grace more convincingly manifested than in the Christian's sorrow. The manner of it, the temper of mind, the sweet submission, the inward peace, the unshaken trust, the cheering and blessed hope, the looking at the unseen, are all more than miraculous attestations of the truth and power of the gospel.

Not alone as a privilege, then, does the apostle direct our thoughts to the manner of our sorrow. The principles of our Christian profession are involved, and our duty as witnesses for the gospel. Unlike the world in their lives, and in the entire scope and aim of their being, Christians are to be most unlike the world in their sorrow. They are to be faithful and consistent in their suffering as well as in the active affairs of their calling. In some respects it is the severest test of our religion. The infliction of bodily pain and the loss of property do not touch the center and citadel of the soul as this does. To be true, consistent, unshaken in the mightiest griefs which man can know, is the sublimest illustration of the doctrine of Christ. Whatever other ends there may be in the Christian's bereavement, this is one always to be recognized: the manifestation of divine grace and consolation in sorrow. There is need of a consistent Christian life in the house of mourning.

The Lay Element.

Mr. Editor: Will you please give some general and positive information, through your columns, concerning the present polity of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Feeling the need of such information has induced me thus to intrude. It is true we have Disciplines, but yet it seems that a correct interpretation is not understood by many. We wish to know how far the episcopal power is curtailed, and how far the power of the lay element may be brought to bear in restricting the authority of traveling ministers by the amendments in the constitution. Some ministers say that there is no difference, or scarcely none, between the government of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Protestant Church, while the opposite side say there is a great deal, affirming that the lay representation is only nominal in the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The above note of inquiry raises two or three points upon which we can give no more light than our correspondent has before him in the Discipline. We do not know that the power of the episcopacy has been directly curtailed by the introduction of lay representation. Laymen are members of the General Conference, and in equal numbers with the clerical delegates. They there help to make the laws, elect the Bishops, and pass upon the administration of the Bishops. The power of the Bishops to appoint the preachers remains intact up to the present time. Formerly the traveling preachers, in General Conference, possessed the exclusive power to legislate for the church. Now the laymen have an equal voice in the legislative body, and this is a considerable restriction upon the authority of traveling preachers. Lay representation is surely something more than nominal when they have an equal representation in the law-making body. In the Annual Conference the lay representation is not equal to the clerical members, but they elect the lay delegates to the General Conference, and are entitled to vote on all questions except that involving ministerial character. On ministerial relations, such as admission on trial, reception into full connection, election to orders, and the like, laymen have a vote. As our preachers all come up through the Quarterly Conference where they are licensed and recommended to the Annual Conference, and as the Quarterly Conference is composed chiefly of laymen, it will be seen that no man can get into the local or traveling ministry except through the vote of laymen. It is only by their concurrence and action that the initial step can be taken.

The Southern University.

The article published last week on Our Conference Colleges is entitled to careful attention. In connection with it and its admirable suggestions we would again call special notice to the condition and claims of the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala. We are well advised of the fact that the board of trustees is highly pleased with the president and professors now in charge, as much so as with any faculty the university has ever had.

This we know is saying a great deal, but it is true. Dr. L. M. Smith is a first-rate man in the pulpit, in the professorial chair and in administrative ability. He graduated at Emory College, Georgia, in 1848, with first honors, in the class with Rev. J. C. Simmons, of California, Rev. Dr. M. S. Andrews, of Alabama, and Rev. Dr. J. S. Key, of Georgia. He has been engaged the most of the time since as professor and president in Emory College. He has distinguished ability, ample experience, and has been successful. He is a preacher of great unction and power, and the very type of a Christian gentleman to impress and mold the character and habits of young men. The professors are all gentlemen of wide reputation, and able and successful teachers. They have commanded high positions, and their competency is avouched by a record of the most flattering character. The location of the university is in the best section of Alabama, in a community of intelligence and refinement, and of easy access by rail from every part of the Southwest.

This institution starts out the present season with new life and with improved prospects. It is prepared to receive and educate a large roll of students, and to do full justice to its patrons. It is a Conference college, especially under the control of the Alabama Conference, and rightfully claims the active support and efforts of the preachers to secure students. If the brethren have not already presented the subject to the people, let them do so at once. It is an interest of vital importance to our church and people. The Southern University has done a great and noble work already. Many of her graduates are in the ministry, and an honor to their alma mater. Others of her alumni are represented in the professions and other secular pursuits, and stand high as reputable and useful citizens. She is now prepared to maintain her past fame and to extend it—to do the work of her past and to improve upon it. We trust there will be no backwardness, no lukewarmness, in the support and patronage of the Southern University.

Dr. John E. Paine.

We have already published the death of this estimable and lamented gentleman in connection with a note from Bishop Paine. The Bishop, writing to the Nashville Christian Advocate, gives the following interesting account of Dr. Paine:

I know that you and many others will sympathize with us when you learn that we have lately suffered a great bereavement. Our precious son, Dr. John Emory Paine, died on the fifteenth instant, in his twenty-fourth year. He was born January 1, 1852, graduated in Emory and Henry College in 1872, and was honored with a "first prize" in surgery upon his graduation as M. D. in the Medical University of New York in February last. On the seventh of April he was most happily united in holy matrimony to Miss Sallie M. Hampton, eldest daughter of the late Dr. William M. Hampton, of this place, and had entered upon the practice of his profession in this his native town with flattering prospects. He loved his profession, and seemed finely adapted to its duties, both by thorough study and a generous impulse to mitigate suffering. He was a dutiful son, a loving and beloved brother, a sincere and genial friend, popular, moral and honorable in his principles. His brief matrimonial relation was, in every respect, all that could be desired. His worldly happiness was complete, and life to him was bright and sweet. And then, again, he seemed so necessary to both families, peculiarly so to his aged and afflicted father, to whom he ministered as a physician, and soothed and comforted as a son and nurse. But in the midst of our sorrow we are consoled by the facts that he had professed religion and joined the church while at college, that having located himself he was only waiting for his church certificate to transfer his membership regularly, and join his pious wife in the service of God. The last of all is that he sought and found renewing grace and the faith of assurance, and was found ready and triumphant. "All is bright," "I am going home," "I am happy," etc., were often on his lips. He bade all present, calmly, and without fear or murmur, an affectionate farewell, and exhorted us all to meet him in heaven. Words cannot convey an idea of the solemnity and moral sublimity of the scene. Our God was there. We surrender him in holy trust to God, in a firm belief of his eternal safety, and that we shall meet him in heaven. Pray for us.

Field Notes.

CAMP MEETING.

The pleasure afforded me by attending this meeting was very great. Besides meeting with old friends and making new ones, I have had a rich feast in listening to the preaching of the "glorious gospel of the blessed God." People may gape and wonder at their star preachers, and go away from the service and not remember a single sentence; but when a man whose soul is full of the gospel talks to me of Jesus and his love it produces a most profound impression. So much to the point in hand was the proclamation of the truth that I said to one preacher: "The Lord sent a man twenty-five miles to hear your sermon to-day." The Lord sent the preacher ten times twenty-five miles to preach to that man. The attendance at the meeting was very good. We had almost an immeasurable waste of waters on the east and on the west, but the people came from the north and from the south. We had also an innumerable number of musquitoes, "which no man could number." It was simply a matter of impossibility to hold woods prayer meetings. Does the adversary ever assume the form of musquitoes, as he does the form of an angel of light? By means of smokes, and "fightings without," and nettings, etc., we managed to carry the meeting through six days. There were about twelve conversions and as many accessions to the church, and the solemn vow of consecration which the Christians took upon themselves the last night demonstrated that the meeting had aroused a lukewarm church to duty. We raised the money to pay off the indebtedness on the shed, and, having a fine lot of ground, with a good shed and a well of excellent water, the brethren have faith that next year the camp meeting will be a grand success.

Some other preachers report fine revivals—Bro. Mc., on F. circuit, and Bro. W., on B. circuit. So the good work goes forward. I am a little afraid that the religion of some of our preachers has a tinge of selfishness in it. In some of them I find a desire to attend those meetings where they think they will receive most benefit, and to shun those where they will have the hardest work to do. We ought always to remember what Paul says about "another man's line of things made ready to our hands."

The waters are rapidly abating. The farmers are earnestly engaged in gathering their crops, and the blessed religion of Jesus is saving souls, having already gathered some into the garner of everlasting life.

Presiding Elder.

Death of Rev. Alejo Hernandez.

Corpus Christi, Texas, Sept. 29, 1875.

Bishop J. C. Keener—Dear Bro.: Rev. Alejo Hernandez died, at his home in this city, during the night of the twenty-seventh instant. He had passed the day as usual. There was no marked change indicating any reason for uneasiness when his friends retired, or even later, when his wife and their two little children repaired to bed. He was seated in his rudely-constructed but comfortable invalid chair, to which he has been confined during his long illness, and in it he calmly passed away from earth and loved ones to heaven and everlasting joy.

He was buried yesterday. The body was conveyed from his home to the Methodist church at four P. M. The Mexican and American congregations attended the services, which were conducted by Rev. Doreteo Garcia. His own people, who greatly loved him, assisted by a friendly hand or two from the American congregation, gently bore his remains to and from the hearse and church, and also laid them in the grave.

Yesterday was a glorious day. All nature was beaming brightly. The air was calm and the sky almost cloudless. As the sun was sinking in the west we slowly and sadly lowered the body to its resting-place. The requiem, sung in Spanish, floated off and upward as an incense upon the still air. The benediction was pronounced, and at half-past five P. M. his friends, led by the pastors of the Mexican and American Methodist churches, and Rev. W. E. Caldwell, of the Presbyterian, did the last kindly office for him, and closed his grave. The church should erect a monument to mark the spot where now rests the body of the first Mexican missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Two kind-hearted ladies — Mrs. Sutherland and Mrs. Williams—have done all that love and kindness can do for Mrs. Hernandez and children. They waited with her during the last silent watching and accompanied her to the grave-yard. Another noble-hearted lady—Mrs. John J. Dix—offered her and her children a home in her own house until the weight of sorrow had passed, and until due and permanent provision could be made. She did not accept, choosing rather her own nation, who, though poor, are ready and willing to do all in their power, and she knows and understands them.

Bro. Sutherland is absent on a tour to the Rio Grande frontier, attending to his duties as presiding elder of the Mexican Border district. When he returns he will doubtless write you more fully.

Respectfully and sincerely yours,
William Headen.

London Preachers.

We give the following extract from "Notes from London," by Dr. Summers, Jr., in the Nashville Christian Advocate:

On Sunday morning I heard the great Dr. Vaughan, of the Temple church. This church belongs to the barristers of the Temple, and it is only by courtesy that strangers are admitted. It is a very old church, built in the early part of the thirteenth century, and the graves of the knights, with their full-size recumbent effigies in full armor, carry one back vividly to crusading days. Dr. Vaughan is better known to your readers, perhaps, through the medium of Good Words and the Sunday Magazine, to which he has contributed so many rich and classical productions. He preached upon "The day of visitation," applying this to the life of the individual, rolling out such volumes of thoughtful beauty that one might well imagine him inspired. There was one sentence, the words of which are still ringing in my ears, and I doubt whether I shall ever forget them: "The sins of the childhood embitter the boyhood, the sins of the boyhood make desolate the manhood, the sins of the manhood deepen that desolation and darken the thoughts of death." Every idea was clothed with beauty, and redolent with the fragrance of freshness, and pregnant with the power of thought.

There has been during the past week, in London, an assemblage of the mayors from the different cities of Europe and America. On Sunday afternoon they assembled with great pomp and ceremony in St. Paul's, headed by the Lord Mayor of this the great world city. Canon Liddon preached to them a powerful sermon from the text: "What is man, that thou art mindful of him?" etc. He spoke of the individualized capacity for exerting influence for good which the city magistrate enjoyed over the sovereign of a realm, and in the evolution of the text showed them how to use that influence for the development of man as he is, and as he was intended to become. As to Liddon's style, I need only refer any one to his Bampton lectures on "Our Lord's Divinity," which rank among the finest productions of our language, notwithstanding the sacramentarianism which crops out here and there. His delivery is so much like that of Dr. Sargent that if I had heard him without seeing him I should have imagined that it was indeed he. And in fact the canon's facial expression also was not so very unlike that of the doctor.

At night I heard Dr. Cumming—the prophet who tried to frighten us into realizing the imminence of our danger by getting up that cock-and-bull story about the second advent in 1868, which we still patiently await. The doctor denied that he said what was attributed to him, and claimed that all that he had foretold, by mathematical calculation, had come to pass, for it was at that very time that the death-blow to the papacy was struck. He referred to the fact that while the Pope was reading the infallibility bull a great cloud settled over St. Peter's, so that his highness was compelled to call for a candle to continue the reading; and as he continued, the thunder roared, and the lightning flashed, so that one of the cardinals leaped from his seat and shouted that a judgment was about to be visited upon them. This he interpreted as the declaration of papal downfall, which "that splendid prince, Bismarck, was sealing by his late political edicts." The gospel, he continued, has been preached to nearly all nations, not for conversion indeed, but for a witness, so that the end was not far off, and he was glad that Mr. Moody had the boldness to affirm the same. Well, I could condone that little streak of insanity in the doctor, on the score of a tremendous rap which he gave predestination en passant. "Talk not to me of elect and non-elect, of predestination, and the like. You can't get behind that cover. If you are damned you damn yourselves. The final welcome reads, 'Come, ye blessed of my Father,' but the ostracism from heaven reads not, 'Depart, ye cursed of my Father'—into everlasting fire prepared not for you, but for the devil and his angels—it was never meant for you, and if it is your final portion, yours is the fault alone." I think I have given you the doctor's exact words, and he did not scruple to add that, although he had great reverence for Calvin, he couldn't stop there in the pool when he had the fountain itself from which to drink. His text was: "Ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

Misrepresentation.

Under this head the Raleigh Christian Advocate notices as follows one of the many vile slanders sent abroad by brethren of the Northern Methodist Church:

The great fraternal camp meeting at Round Lake did not soften the temper and change the tone of all the Northern people who attended upon its exercises. Nor did it break the force of willful misrepresentation so rife among those of the Bishop Haven school. Zion's Herald contains the following from a correspondent who attended the late Round Lake camp meeting. He places the Methodist Church South in a false light before the readers of that journal:

"Since returning from Round Lake I have had an interview with another laborer in our South Carolina work (I call not names, lest such reports should enhance the embarrassments of their work.) He says the Methodist Episcopal Church South has within it the principle of decay. They utterly neglect the colored people. The poor whites they never did seek to elevate. They have given up class meetings and probation of a full membership, and, though they report a great increase, it is a great social organization rather than a church of Christ.

"And how can God be with a people who neither enter into the work of elevating and Christianizing the degraded, nor suffer those who have entered it to have a place at their altars?"

It is astonishing that any man of ordinary intelligence, with a moderate share of perception and piety, could undertake to create the impression that the Methodist Church South is in any sense losing its moral power. We do not say that our people are doing all that they might do to advance the cause of Christ, but it is quite true that our church was never more prosperous, and marks of decay are nowhere visible except to those who advocate the doctrine of disintegration and absorption. As a church we have ever cared for the poor and the destitute. The colored people, who were numbered in our church by the thousands before the war, have left us and placed themselves under the guardianship of the Northern Church. If left to themselves they would have remained with us, but they were advised to "come back to the mother church," and are told that our people were their enemies. They were deceived and decoyed away from us. Some have come back to us, and others desire to do so. We are ever ready to instruct them in the excellent doctrines of God's holy truth.

The St. Louis Conference met at Salem, September 22, and adjourned on Monday evening, September 26. Dr. McAnally speaks of the session as follows:

Taking it all in all, it was a pleasant and profitable session. The statistical report will show an increase in the aggregate number of church members, while there has been progress in other matters.

A very hearty indorsement was given the St. Louis Christian Advocate and our publishing interests at St. Louis.

Bishop Keener presided throughout the entire Conference to the satisfaction of all. At least I heard no complaint nor saw anything at all to be complained of, and I have seen and heard all that was done or said in the way of Conference business, not having been absent from the Conference room during the sessions ten minutes, all told, from the time Conference met on Wednesday morning until the Bishop rose to-night to read out the appointments. The course of the Bishop was commended by all.

The next annual session of the Conference will be held at Washington, Mo.

A good state of religious feeling existed in the congregations at the church during the week, and on last night the interest was deep, widely spread, and the prospects for an extensive revival quite good.

The following are the appointments for the St. Louis district:

St. Louis District.—A. T. Scruggs, P. E.; First church, Thomas M. Finney; Centenary, W. V. Tudor; St. John's, J. W. Lewis; St. Paul's, to be supplied; Chonteau avenue, F. A. Owen; Carondelet, Wesley Browning; Bellefontaine, W. M. Williams; Bridgeton, F. A. Morris; Eden, J. E. Treadwell; Mount Olive circuit, J. W. Robinson; Kirkwood, W. M. Leftwich; Manchester, J. S. Frazier; Marvin chapel and City mission, to be supplied by J. J. Watts; editor of St. Louis Christian Advocate, D. R. McAnally.

We see by announcement that Rev. A. G. Haygood has been secured as editorial correspondent by the Southern Christian Advocate. Dr. Haygood should keep himself in harness by all means, and never allow his facile pen to rust.

Dr. C. J. Bickham has removed his office to 649 Magazine street, corner of Jackson. Dr. Bickham stands at the head of his profession in New Orleans. See his card in another column.

Dr. A. W. Smith, of the Tennessee Conference, and pastor at Columbia, Tenn., died in that city September 23. He was an able, zealous and useful minister of Christ, and dearly beloved by his brethren.

Mrs. Lambuth in Baltimore.

Dr. D. C. Kelley—Dear Brother: In response to an invitation, sent through the president of the Woman's Bible Mission, by request of the society, Mrs. Lambuth, our honored sister from China, arrived in the city the first day of this month. The next evening she held a parlor meeting at Friendsbury, an old and well-known homestead of the late Judge Baker's family. Although within the limits of the corporation, this lovely place is not immediately in the city, and we feared the distance might hinder the ladies from assembling in numbers. We, however, had an overflowing attendance of our Southern women, to whom, in her own unostentatious manner, our friend and guest showed the need of China's daughters. While listening to the thrilling details of heathen superstition many a heart received its first impression of the high responsibility laid upon woman to assist in building up the gospel lamp so as to shed its radiance over darkened heathen homes.

In order to give all our Sunday schools the privilege of meeting Mrs. Lambuth, it was arranged that at nine o'clock A. M., Trinity, Emmanuel, Holland street and Bond street Sunday schools should assemble at Trinity church, corner of Preston street and Madison avenue. And at three o'clock P. M., St. Paul's, Central, Calvary and Frederick avenue schools at St. Paul's, Fayette street.

On Sunday morning from two to three hundred children of Trinity and Emmanuel Sunday schools (with their respective pastors) were present, and listened, with intelligent interest, to details of life among the boys and girls of China. Holland and Bond street schools were not represented, owing, probably, to their remoteness from Trinity.

At three o'clock P. M. about one thousand children, from the four Sunday schools appointed to meet there, with their pastors, superintendents, officers, teachers and others, filled to overflowing St. Paul's church, the largest we have in the city. As our gentle representative of the foreign missionary work gave lucid, graphic delineations of the mysterious doctrines and superstitious cruelties which reign among the people with whom, for twenty years, she has been laboring, the sea of bright young faces, that beamed responsive to every word she uttered, gave promise of a goodly harvest from the seed she was then sowing. During the interim between the morning and evening services in our own churches Mrs. Lambuth, in answer to a most earnest invitation from the pastor and superintendent of Chatsworth Independent Methodist Episcopal Church, met the children (numbering about two hundred) in their Sunday school room. Nowhere was the welcome warmer; charming singing, glowing faces, kindly greetings from the young people, evidenced a goodly training in missionary information. On Monday evening a parlor meeting was held in East Baltimore, which was largely attended. On Wednesday Mrs. Lambuth, accompanied by members of the Woman's Bible Mission, visited Washington, and in the parsonage of the Southern Church met only a few of the ladies of that charge, but from that few much may be expected. On Thursday, at four o'clock P. M., a goodly attendance of ladies and children in the basement of the Southern Church in Alexandria, Va., indicated much interest in the good cause. Sweet and hallowing influences pervaded the audience, and no impartial spectator could doubt that increase of zeal and larger liberality to foreign missions would be the result of our sister's visit to that city. On Saturday morning Mrs. Lambuth left Baltimore for Richmond, where she was eagerly expected. By special invitation from the Central congregation she returned to this place, and met over fifty ladies in the western section of the city. This, the last, though not the least, of the series of parlor meetings, will never be forgotten. A culmination of the growing interest excited by the conversations of our beloved guest was visible, while, mingled with all, was the sorrow to the majority present that they "should see her face no more." As a tangible indication of interest, the ladies of Central congregation took a scholarship in Mrs. Lambuth's school, paying into her hands the first $50—one year's requirement. St. Paul's ladies presented $25 as an offering to the China mission; and Emmanuel's ladies did better than all, for, almost in its infancy, they brought up an offering of $17. Trinity Sunday school, through their superintendent, pledges $100, to be appropriated to schools in China. These are not large sums for old and established congregations, but from the Southern Church, so recently planted here, it speaks well for the future.

Truly yours,

Juliana Hayes.

A Theological Seminary in Mexico.—Rev. C. W. Drees, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Puebla, Mexico, writes to the Western Advocate: "A new phase of our work is beginning to develop itself. Dr. Butler has sent me two young men, one twenty-five and the other eighteen years of age, who, with my native helper, are to form the nucleus of a theological school under my direction. I have to begin with them almost utterly without books or other aids, and try to train them into efficient preachers of the truth. I expect the number of this new class of occupants of our house will be considerably increased by October 1." May we not hope that from this humble beginning there will grow up a grand theological seminary, which shall send forth hundreds of preachers to convert, with God's help, the citizens of our sister republic?

Life is a sum, and it becomes us to do it properly, as it can be done but once.

The reward of well-doing is satisfaction here and happiness hereafter.

Gagged and Bound.

The animus of the fraternity agitators comes more and more to the surface from day to day. The Richmond Christian Advocate, always sound and sensible, serves up an item or two, as follows:

There appeared in the last Advocate a communication under the caption of "We be Brethren." It is common sense and Christianity. The whole question is put in a nutshell.

It is indeed a queer kind of "fraternity" that fawns on the old persecutor and kisses his rod, and at the same time looks coldly on the Conference comrades of many years. The man who is eager to hug an iceberg at the North Pole surely should not forget to embrace the brethren of his own household.

The Rev. Dr. Clark, whom the Savannah Methodists have sent out as a canvasser for a new church they wish to build, has had a good time hugging the Northern brethren; and, it seems, to some purpose. We believe he has not yet tackled Gilbert Haven.

He was recently at Emory Grove, in Maryland, at a Northern Methodist camp meeting.—Of his visit there the Rev. George V. Leech, a leading minister of that church, writes to Zion's Herald, Boston:

"The artless and scholarly Dr. Clark, of Savannah Methodist Episcopal Church South, gave us a capital sermon on 'Christian Liberality,' but did perhaps his best work in his brotherly and genial intercourse with the occupants of the preachers' tent. His expose of the way in which a few of the 'managers' of the late General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South gagged and bound the fraternal impulses of the great majority of said Conference was refreshing."

It seems the "artless" brother did well in the pulpit, but his "best work" in the opinion of Bro. Leech, was "in the preachers' tent," in a circle of Northern Methodist ministers, making an "expose" of "the managers' gagging," etc. This back-stair story of the "artless and genial Clark," we are sorry to learn from the report of our listeners, was "refreshing to the occupants of the preachers' tent."

Was there no man among the "occupants of the preachers' tent" with acumen enough to see that if this narrative was correct Dr. Clark was showing up men unworthy of fraternity. He is a Southern minister, and we regret that he has such a view of the action of many of the ablest men in our late General Conference.

We cannot call this the "best work" of Dr. Clark.

The July reports from the Chinese mission schools of the American Missionary Association show a total membership for that month of 483, and an average attendance of 306. Six were baptized on August 1, two of whom united with the Presbyterian church in Santa Barbara, two with the First Congregational church in Oakland, and two with Bethany Congregational church in this city.

Publisher's Department.

E. E. F. Ross, Esq., connected for several years with the Christian Advocate, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

A New City Directory.—A well-compiled directory, such as the one last published by Soards for 1875, is of almost universal necessity in the stores and offices of New Orleans. We have never had a better directory than his for this city, but the publisher himself promises to surpass it in his New Orleans Directory for 1876. He will soon call upon our merchants for advertisements and subscriptions, and commence the canvass. The publication will involve much labor and expense, and the publisher relies upon the liberality of many subscribers to reimburse his investment. The advantages of advertising in this work are known to our business men, and they will only help themselves when they help make a good City Directory.

On this page will be seen the advertisement of the Complete Cotton Cleaner. It was built to satisfy a want long felt by planters: that of getting rid of the dirt and trash which is necessarily brought into the gin-house with the cotton. It is claimed by the proprietors that the cleaner materially improves the quality and grade of any cotton passed through it, and that it will pay for itself in a short time, besides possessing other advantages, to which we have not space to refer. The New Orleans agents are Messrs. Frierson & Co., 77 Carondelet street, who will cheerfully give all needed information to those interested.

We call attention to the advertisement of J. D. Reel, which appears to-day. Mr. Reel's Workingmen's Grocery Store has been established since 1856, and is one of the largest and best-ordered we have seen. The cash system is adhered to at this store, and this enables the proprietor to sell at the lowest prices. We can advise any one needing groceries to call at this establishment, located at 779 and 781 Tchoupitoulas street.

Chambers Sterling Pianos.—We invite the attention of our readers to the announcement of the Chambers pianos in to-day's paper. These pianos are very highly recommended by competent judges. The following is taken from the Courier-Journal:

Mr. D. P. Cropper says: "I am more than pleased with my Chambers piano."

Mr. Irvine Eddy says: "I wouldn't give it for all the Steinways I ever heard!"

Capt. Ben. Cox says: "I am satisfied you have sold me the finest piano I ever listened to."

Capt. Kenniston is of the opinion: "It is the best," and is satisfied.

Rev. Mr. Bracken says: "The Chambers piano gives universal satisfaction to those who hear it and myself."

Dr. Williams is "highly pleased, and recommends the Chambers piano to everybody as the best."

Those of our readers who propose to visit Cincinnati during the coming Industrial Exposition will be glad to know that this paper can be seen on file at the office of E. N. Freshman, advertising agent, 190 West Fourth street, where all facilities will be extended them to read their home news.

This unrivaled Southern Remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is containing those Southern Roots and Herbs which an all-wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases most prevail. It will cure all Diseases Caused by Derangement of the Liver.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

Some SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a Bitter or Bad Taste in the Mouth, Pain in the Back, Sides or Joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism, Sour Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Bowels Alternately Costive and Lax, Headache, Loss of Memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done, Debility, Low Spirits, a Thick, Yellow Appearance of the Skin and Eyes, a Dry Cough, often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of these symptoms attend the disease, at others very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and, if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and Death will ensue.

Farm, Garden and Household.

The Farmer's Allies.

At the recent meeting of the Michigan Pomological Society Dr. Edward Dorsch, in the course of an interesting address, remarked:

Many of our farmers feel great satisfaction if the spade kills a harmless mole, whose only crime is the little hill of earth he raises in our meadows when he goes upon his hunting expeditions, and which can be flattened again by the foot of the farmer before it hinders the motion of the scythe or mowing machine.

Nature has given us the mole as a never-tiring destroyer of all kinds of fruit-worms, larvæ and other vermin which live on the roots of our grass and grain-bearing plants and fruit-trees, and at a place where we cannot follow them. Nature has given him such a tremendous appetite that he dies if he has nothing to eat for six hours, and his only food is meat, as far as insects and worms furnish it.

Hundreds of moles have been dissected and their stomachs examined, but not the least vegetable fiber was ever found except it was brought to it by devoured insects. Experiments have shown that in case of want the mole eats up its kind and own family rather than touch any vegetable. I know very well that the eyes of the lady fill with tears if she finds, during her morning walk, a few of her pet plants almost dying on account of the burrowing of a criminal mole which selects her rare buds as its hunting grounds, and throws up his hill next to her best geranium or heliotrope.

But if the fair lady would reason a little she would tender the gray culprit a hearty forgiveness, and thank him for the extinction of the restless enemies who feed upon the roots of her cherished plants, and she would press down the earth again and water the injured flowers, which will afterward grow so much better because the ground has been loosened.

Prices were paid in former times by stupid communities, in the old country, for every mole caught. Men have spent time and money in catching this benefactor of mankind only to find themselves punished for their ignorance by being overrun with bugs and beetles, crickets and caterpillars. Nevertheless, our boys are still permitted to torment and kill these inoffensive but much slandered vermin-hunters.

But the time will come when his virtues will be recognized, as it has already arrived for the toad, for which the English gardeners pay four shillings each with pleasure now, to set them as guards in their salad beds against snails and bugs, after having found out the good service they accomplish.

What horrid tales has superstition not told about this harmless Batrachian! Its bite is poisonous, it has been said. Who was ever bitten by a toad? Its jaws have no teeth—no sharp, horny edges like the turtle. It, says an old wiseacre—who may have saw it in a school-book of 1701—if it can't bite, its saliva and the juice oozing from the warts on its back are poisonous. Natural science of to-day denies it. The toad has as little saliva as the frog—hardly enough to keep its tongue moistened, which is always sticky and clammy, to glue on the insects it catches, and the slime oozing from its warts causes perhaps a reddening of the skin, but will poison nobody.

When the cool evening draws the dark cloak of night over the face of the earth the toad emerges from its moist resting-place and begins to look for snails, flies and bugs. Slowly it creeps forward, and narrow is the region of its hunting ground, but it goes over it systematically, thoroughly knowing the hiding-places of spiders and slugs as a worthy member of the order of St. Hubertus.

KEEPING APPLES THROUGH THE WINTER.—Mr. Alexander Hyde, a well-known agriculturist of Massachusetts, communicates to the New York Times some useful suggestions in regard to keeping apples through the winter. One method is to wrap each apple in a bit of old newspaper, the paper serving both to keep out the air and to prevent the apples from bruising in transportation. A method more effectual still is to fill the barrels nearly full of apples and then put in some dry, fine sand or powdered plaster, and shake it down gently. This will fill up all the interstices between the apples, and keep them fresh indefinitely. Another mode is to pit the apples in some dry, sandy or gravelly soil, just as turnips and potatoes are pitted. On this point Mr. Hyde says: "They will keep splendidly through the winter, thus pitted, but must be used speedily in the spring after they are dug out, as they will rot soon after exposure to the light and air. In order to pit apples, select some dry spot where there is no possibility of water filling the pit, and dig a hole three or four feet deep, and of any required size, place some clean, dry straw on the bottom, and on this the apples, to the depth of two feet, covering the whole with a layer of straw and then a layer of dry earth, raising the latter above the general level of the ground, and sloping it roof-fashion, so that it will shed rain. The apples will come out in the spring as crisp as cabbages when pitted in this way."

"TEN ACRES ENOUGH."—In answering several inquiries which appeared in our last number, in the third column of page 470, one question was overlooked, namely: "Who is the author of Ten Acres Enough?" That sprightly little book was written by the late Edmund Morris, of Burlington, N. J., with whom one of the editors of the Country Gentleman was acquainted for nearly forty years. The work has been supposed by many to be wholly fictitious. The basis of it, however, was true, and on a visit to his grounds in 1866 we walked over the ten acres, which had then been increased by the addition of twelve more. The grounds were in the finest condition and in a high state of cultivation, the myriads of weeds spoken of in the narrative having been completely extirpated. In the early days of raspberry marketing he sold $800 worth from an acre of the Philadelphia. The bushes which we saw were profusely loaded, and he informed us he had once obtained at the rate of two hundred bushels per acre. We observed many corroborative evidences of the general truth of the narrative, and even the old thirty-dollar horse was still at work at the plow.—Cultivator and Country Gentleman.

KEEPING POULTRY IN ORCHARDS. Some farmers make it a practice to keep their poultry in their orchards from early spring until cold weather sets in; and they find that it pays for so doing. A picket fence should be built around the orchard, high enough to prevent their flying over, with suitable building placed in one corner of the yard to shelter them at night. Thus situated, the poultry will thrive and prosper, keeping themselves in good condition, and the increase of eggs will be greatly augmented, and their usefulness enhanced, to their owners at least, on account of the myriads of insects and worms they destroy, and which will more than repay the cost and labor of building the fence. By keeping them inclosed in this manner a large number of fowls may be retained in the orchard, and the continual scratching which is done by them will prove advantageous both to the soil and trees themselves.—Colonial Farmer.

PREJUDICE lurks in hidden corners of all minds over which knowledge has not shed its penetrating light, and prejudice is the natural foe of magnanimity.

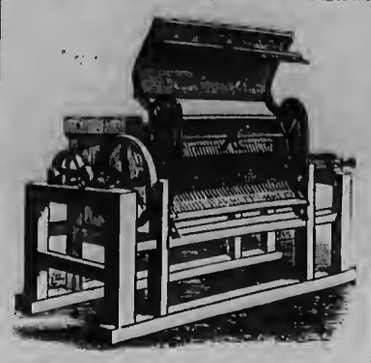
PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past two seasons, and some recent improvements added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the rolls from breaking, and gives a larger yield of lint than any other Gin in use. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, and in consequence the market price of the cotton is enhanced materially. This increased value, given by length of staple and extra production of lint, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every one hundred bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

Cincinnati Purchasing Agency.

H. D. ROGERS & CO.,
(Late of Baker, Rogers & Co.,)

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENTS,

22 W. Fourth St. (Merchants' Exchange Building,) CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Orders for all kinds of Merchandise and Manufactured Goods filled at the lowest market rates; and any information needed regarding prices or other matters connected with the trade promptly furnished.

Our office in the entrance to the Merchants' Exchange, Nos. 20 and 22 West Fourth street, where its many members are constantly passing, gives us the best of facilities for exhibiting samples of Grain, Cotton and Manufactured Articles, which advantage we offer to those desiring our services.

From the Cincinnati Price Current, March 13, 1869.

"We desire to call the attention of merchants in the interior to the card of Messrs. H. D. Rogers & Co., which is published in another column. This firm proposes introducing a new business, namely: filling orders for any kind of Merchandise or Manufactured Goods to be found in this market, charging only a small commission, thus enabling country merchants, manufacturers, farmers, and indeed all classes, to procure any article they may need at the lowest cash price, without incurring the expenses of coming to the city. And as Mr. Rogers is thoroughly conversant with the city trade in all its departments, and one whose integrity and fidelity to the interests of his customers are of the highest order, no doubt need be entertained by those sending their orders to this firm that they will be faithfully attended to."

Quotations furnished on application. Shippers and others forwarding samples will have their value ascertained, and an offer made, if practicable.

With an experience of twenty years in merchandising in this city, we can offer the best facilities and references. y22 3m

Scientific.

—The freezing of mercury happens at 30° or 40° below zero, but absolute alcohol, it is declared, has never been frozen, though Prof. Farraday found it looked a little turbid when subjected to a temperature (artificial) of 166° below zero. High wines contain 75 per cent. of alcohol. Proof spirits of government standard are placed at 50 per cent. alcohol. In the severest cold of the arctic explorations proof spirits never froze.

—In opposition to the now prevailing theory among astronomers and physicists that the sun possesses an exceedingly high temperature, M. Violle has maintained for some time that this temperature is only about 3,000°. In a recent publication he gives the result of some further researches upon this subject, in which he attempts to establish the solar temperature to be the temperature which must be possessed by a body of the same apparent diameter as the sun, in order that, endowed with an emissive power equal to the mean emissive power of the solar surface, it may emit in the same time the same quantity of heat as the sun. He assumes finally that the mean emissive power of the sun is equal to that of melted steel.

—A process of making electrotype plates by the aid of photography, invented by Mr. Walter Woodbury, is thus described by a chemical journal: A plate of metal is coated with gum, glucose and bichromate of ammonia, dried rapidly and exposed under a positive to the light. When the plate is breathed upon it will be found to have different degrees of stickiness, so that, when emery or pulverized glass is dusted over it, commencing with a coarse powder and continuing with powder one or two numbers finer, it will be found that the coarser particles adhere readily to the most sticky portions, and the finer to the other portions. Then, when the plate has been hardened by a subsequent exposure to the light, it can be used as a mold for obtaining an impression in soft metal, which can be electrotyped.

—Few people know the value of paper as a protection against cold. No one knows, unless he has tried it, what a capital rug the Times newspaper and its supplement will make, and few people are aware what an excellent substitute for paucity of blankets can be contrived from a selection of our daily cotemporaries. It is not generally known that a brown paper lining will make an ordinary coat as serviceable as a great coat, and that an under-waistcoat deftly contrived of the same material is equal in value to a flannel shirt. This is a fact that cannot be too widely known among all classes, for it cannot fail to be useful to the high as well as to the low. The cheapness, the portability, the universality of paper—combined with the fact that you can throw it away when you have done with it—renders the material, as an addition to cheap winter clothing, valuable in the highest degree.—London Graphic.

I HAVE RECENTLY ACCEPTED THE AGENCY OF THE CELEBRATED

STUDEBAKER WAGON.

FROM ONE TO SIX HORSE.

THE MOST SUBSTANTIAL WAGONS MADE!

There are several reasons why all should buy the above Wagon: First. They are made of the BEST SELECTED TIMBER, the same being cut at the proper season of the year, piled under sheds, properly dated, and allowed to remain there from three to five years. Second. The wood-work is shaped by the latest improved machinery, put together by the BEST WAGON MECHANICS IN THE WORLD, and are the best ironed and painted Wagons in the market. Third. Their tubular skeins, made of select iron, are set by patent skein setters, and weigh from four to twenty-five pounds per set more than any other, thereby making a perfect running Wagon, which will not break. Fourth. They are the only Wagon in which the SLOPE-SHOULDER SPOKE is used; hence they have the best wheel, which is actually the foundation of the Wagon, and should be carefully examined by persons purchasing. Fifth. They are sold only by responsible parties, and every Wagon is warranted; while the Studebaker Bros. are practical workmen, and attend to their business personally; hence the superiority of their work over all others.

THE DUBOIS FLANGE COTTON GIN.

$4.50 $4.50

By the Flange the Cotton is kept in contact with the teeth on each side, until the fiber is taken from the seed, without allowing them to be taken up by the return motion of the roll, as in other Gins.

The Flange prevents hulls, stems, sticks and hard substances from being cut, consequently making a better sample out of roughly-picked cotton than other Gins.

We have sold more from this point than any agency of any other Gin for the crop of 1873-74; consequently we can furnish more and better references, and they are warranted to come up to all that is said of them.

We keep constantly on hand all sizes, from 40 to 80 SAW STANDS, left or right. Price, $1.50 per Saw. GOLSAN BROTHERS,

On Saturday the market opened with a good demand, but operations being checked by light supplies of the kinds most in request, and factors refusing to make any further concessions, the business during the morning was of only moderate extent. Later in the day, however, the movement became more active, and the entire sales summed up 3,350 bales, which is the largest business this season. Nothing transpired to indicate any quotable variation. Good staple cottons continued in good request, and commanded extreme rates compared with other descriptions. On Monday the demand continued fair, but during the morning operations were restricted by light supplies of desirable kinds. Later in the day, however, more samples having been opened, the movement became animated, and resulted in sales of 1,900 bales. The business would no doubt have been of much larger extent had it not been for light supplies and a poor assortment. On Tuesday the demand was quite active, and the sales summed up 2,800 bales, at steady prices for the general run of the offerings and extreme rates for good staple kinds.

The above makes an aggregate for the past three days of 8,050 bales, against 5,800 for the corresponding time last week and 3,600 the week before.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 44,321 bales, against 39,033 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 27,318 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 36,285—236,500 against 200,221. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 26 bales to France, of 6,242 to other foreign ports, and a decrease of 11,508 to Great Britain. Advertisers' Directory

OF THE

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Alphabetically Arranged Under the Heads of the Business or Articles Advertised.

NOTE.—We take no advertisements except from those who we have good reason to believe are respectable and reliable. The publisher urges his solicitor and agents to seek the advertisements of the most worthy and reliable representatives in every branch of business, and not to apply to or accept business from persons of doubtful character. We have refused business to the extent of thousands of dollars each year for want of satisfactory information in reference to applicants. We think we may safely claim for the list below that it embraces, as a rule, the very best men and firms in the different branches represented.

☞ We do not retain dead advertisements.

RAILROADS.

NEW ORLEANS, ST. LOUIS AND CHICAGO RAILROAD CO.

(

The Christian Advocate.

PUBLISHED BY ROBT. J. HARP, FOR THE ALABAMA, MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA CONFERENCES, METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH SOUTH.

VOL. 21. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1875. NO. 42.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

GALVESTON, Oct. 6.—The bridge over the bay is completed, and trains are running regularly over the road to-day. Scarcely any traces now remain of the late storm. Large numbers of merchants from the interior of the State are in the city. Business is very active in all branches of trade.

Contributions for the sufferers are still coming in from all sections and being forwarded to locations where most needed.

Galveston harbor has been immensely benefited by the storm, it having washed and deepened the channel over the bars several feet.

CHICAGO, Oct. 6.—The commissioners of the American Board of Foreign Missions met here. Rev. Mark Hopkins presided. The treasurer's report for the year ending August 31 shows: Expenditures, $450,-238; donations, $340,084; legacies, $89,702; indebtedness of the board, $49,323.

CHARLESTON, Oct. 6.—The municipal election to-day passed off without serious disturbances. Full returns have not yet been received, but it is conceded that the coalition of Republicans and Conservatives have re-elected Mayor Cunningham and their entire ticket by at least two thousand majority.

MOBILE, Oct. 7.—At a meeting of the Board of Health last evening the following publication was ordered made in the city papers:

The board have no knowledge of the existence at present of any case of yellow fever in the city. The last case they have any report of originated September 27.

The few cases that occurred were confined to one locality, and no disposition to spread has been manifested.

The board have taken all precautions deemed necessary to disinfect the locality in question.

GEO. A. KETCHUM, M. D.,
President of Board.

MEMPHIS, Oct. 8.—The Memphis Cotton Exchange has offered a premium of $1,000 for the best bale of cotton of the present crop grown in the country tributary to Memphis for exhibition at the Philadelphia centennial.

The Friar's Point war is considered at an end. The whole affair was generally regarded here as a politicians' brawl. The Ledger's Helena special says Sheriff Brown is still there, and says he will not return to Friar's Point, and that the negroes there threaten to kill him if he does. Many negroes from Coahoma county are in Helena. Chalmers is endeavoring to surround Pease and capture him, if possible.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 11.—At a meeting of clergymen and laymen, held this afternoon, a telegram was received from Moody, the revivalist, reading as follows: "Have asked Brooklyn to let me off. I will commence work in your city on October 31, God willing."

DES MOINES, IOWA, Oct. 12.—Election returns received up to midnight indicate Republican gains of about fifteen per cent. over the majority of that party in 1874, when it was 28,-743, and of twenty per cent. over the Republican majority for Governor in 1873.

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 13, 1 A. M.—The Democrats concede Hayes' election by 5,000. The Republicans claim Hayes' election by 10,000.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, Oct. 5.—The experiment of bringing peaches per the steamer Canada from New York in a box on deck, arranged on the Allegretti refrigerating plan, was a success, the fruit being delivered here in good condition and eagerly purchased.

Dedication and Inauguration of the Vanderbilt University.

Sunday and Monday, October 3, 4, were red-letter days in our calendar. Vanderbilt University was dedicated and opened with imposing solemnities. Heaven and earth on both days were propitious, and everything was orderly arranged for the occasion. A company of marshals, Maj. Weakley being the chief, rendered valuable assistance. The University bell sent forth its silver tones on Sunday morning, and the tribes came up to the opening service, and entered by "the beautiful gate of the temple" into the chapel—the board of trust, faculties and officiating ministers moving in procession from the chancellor's office to the platform.

After a voluntary by the choir of McKendree church, and others gifted in sacred song—led by Mrs. Blondner on the organ—Charles Wesley's exquisite paraphrase of Psalm cxlviii, 12, 13—

Young men and maidens raise—was sung. Prayer was offered by Bishop McTyeire—comprehensive, pertinent, solemn. Bishop Doggett read, as appropriate lessons, Psalms xix and Hebrews i. The coronation hymn was sung. Bishop Doggett then delivered a masterly discourse on "The Dynamics of Christianity." The learned divine informed us that the term was suggested by the Greek word in his text: "The powers—dynameis—of the world to come."—Heb. vi, 5. "The world to come," he properly told us, is a phrase belonging to the Old Testament standpoint, and referring to the new dispensation, or kingdom of Christ, which was introduced by miraculous operations of the Holy Spirit—the word dynameis having that import, and being so rendered in Hebrews ii, 4—"miracles"—and in many places in the Synoptic Gospels. But it also indicates the supernatural forces which operate within this spiritual realm, and which were most eloquently developed in the discourse, and applied to the occasion. But we will not attempt to give a synopsis of this noble sermon, as it is to be issued in pamphlet form.

The dedication hymn then followed:

Father Almighty! hear our cry!
Sovereign of all on earth, on high;
Lord God of power and might, thou art
The strength and hope of every heart!

Eternal Wisdom! Light have we
Only as it beams forth from thee;
Let the refulgent rays divine
On our poor darkling spirits shine!

Fountain of Love! Without thy grace
Earth is a dreary, cheerless place;
Thy all comprising peace impart,
Spirit Divine, to every heart!

Great Three in One! Now from above
Give power, give wisdom and give love,
As thus we consecrate to thee
With joy our University!

Lord, let thy work to us appear,
Thy glory to our children here;
Our work shall then established be
To us and our posterity.

Patrons and benefactors bless—
To teachers, students, give success;
We pray in faith, assured thou wilt
Shine forth upon our Vanderbilt!

Bishop Palne then led the congregation in a most appropriate and fervent prayer. The morning service was closed with "Old Hundred," and the benediction by Bishop Doggett.

The afternoon service was opened with an anthem taken from Psalms xcvi, the music having been composed by Mrs. Blondner, a beautiful piece, well rendered, as was all the singing during the day. Hymn 771 was sung:

How shall the young secure their hearts?

Dr. Deems offered a comprehensive prayer, ad rem. Bishop Wightman read the lesson—a part of Colossians i. The choir then led the congregation in singing a part of hymn 794—one of the hymns written by Charles Wesley for Kingswood School, founded by John Wesley in 1748:

Come, Father, Son and Holy Ghost,
To whom we for our children cry.

Then followed a capital sermon by Bishop Wightman on Colossians i, 17: "By him all things consist." The Bishop informed us that the Greek term here rendered "consist" (Vulgate, constant) means to stand together; and from this suggestion "he preached unto us Jesus," as the great Nexus that binds together all things in all worlds. That was indeed the gospel—a meet discourse to follow that of the morning. The application to the occasion was most happy. But we forbear analysis or synopsis, as it is to appear in print. The dedication ode was then sung, in Albion, or America:

Father Omnipotent,
Our offering we present,
And trust thou wilt
Deign to accept what we,
With a glad heart and free,
Ornatefully offer thee—
Our Vanderbilt!

Incarnate Word Divine,
We offer thee this shrine,
And trust thou wilt,
Great Sun of Righteousness,
Beam forth with special grace,
And consecrate and bless
Our Vanderbilt!

Creator Spirit, come,
And consecrate this dome!
We trust thou wilt!
Descend from heaven above,
Like the symbolic dove,
And hover o'er, in love,
Our Vanderbilt!

All glorious One in Three,
This shrine we offer thee,
And know thou wilt,
For thy own mercy's sake,
In condescension take
The offering which we make—
Our Vanderbilt!

Dr. McFerrin offered an appropriate prayer, and the dedicatory service closed with the doxology:

To the great One in Three,

and the benediction by Bishop Wightman.

Monday morning, October 4, opened calm and bright, falsifying the predictions of the prophets of evil, who had prophesied of rain. Just before ten A. M., under the escort of the chief marshal, his excellency Gov. Porter, with the Bishops, board of trust and faculties, followed by the students, went in procession from the chancellor's office to the chapel. After music by the band and a sweet voluntary by the choir, a splendid, full-length portrait of Commodore Vanderbilt was unveiled amid great applause. It is, indeed, a magnificent work of art, and is said to be a fine likeness. The Governor was introduced by Bishop McTyeire, and his excellency made a brief and pertinent address, congratulating the State and the country on the establishment of the University in the capital of the State over which he so worthily presides. Dr. Deems followed in a learned and eloquent address on the Relation of the University to Science and Religion, between which there is no antagonism, as some mistaken men on both sides imagine. Dr. Lipscomb then delivered a magnificent address on the Relation of the University to General Culture. The installation of the faculties then took place. Bishop McTyeire addressed the faculties, all the members of which stood during his address, which was most happily conceived, at the close of which he delivered over the keys of the University to the chancellor, who responded in his own inimitable style. His reference to his glorified friend, Dr. Green, was most touching, and his allusion to the great benefactor of the institution which bears his honored name was in fine taste. A part of the following exquisitely beautiful ode, composed for the occasion by Dr. Lipscomb, was then sung in Old Hundred, and the large audience, which had been entranced for more than four hours, was dismissed with the benediction by Bishop Doggett:

Beneath the temple's stately height,
Midst pomp of gold—midst spears of light,
While priestly chant with incense blends,
The crown of empire lowly bends;
The toll that awed the list'ning air
Now vocal breathes with praise and prayer,
And flames ne'er seen in sun or sky
Their splendors flash on Israel's eye.

The heavenward Alps, sublime and lone,
Echo but faint the thunder's tone;
The mighty sea but rolls to shore
The dying cadence of its roar:
But priests and people blessings share
Far richer than their monarch's prayer;
Though myriad hearts in one may yearn,
Answers more full from God return.

Hath not this house been reared by thee?
Thy thought, thy grace, naught else we see:
Thy hand did seal its corner stone,
Long waiting till thy favor shone;
Take now thine own, and evermore
Enrich it from thy bounty's store;
Each hour shed light upon our way,
Each step advance tow'rd perfect day.

O Earth, thou footstool of the throne,
This glory thine—thine all alone;
Thy throb in stir, thy throb in rest,
Our pulses ask this day of thee,
That in the thrill of gladdened heart
Our praise of thine may be a part,
While, rolling far, thy anthems tell
What raptures high within us swell.

Not like the stones which Jesus taught
Should prophets be with judgments fraught,
If scornful men should doom his name
With curse of silence born of shame;
Nay, every rock within these walls
Shall answer back when Jesus calls,
Each marble block a tablet be
Of laws proclaimed, O Lord, by thee.

Here arts and sciences shall meet,
Bright, festal hours, their coming greet;
Here Faith shall stand, archangel fair,
Her diadem of grandeur wear;
Here Truth, a pilgrim wandering far,
Shall tranquil rest 'neath Hope's fixed star;
And Beauty touch with sandaled feet
The turf with Sharon's fragrance sweet.

We bless thee to thy tolling hours,
Mid fertile fields and fruitful showers;
We bless thee to the love that hastes
To barren sands and arid wastes;
Go—noblest types of manhood rear,
Each brother-man to man more dear;
Go—fill thy measure of renown,
Then wreathe around the cross thy crown.

O Alma Mater of the years
Beyond our day of toil and tears;
O Alma Mater of a race
Whose future glows with largest grace;
Gird on the old heroic might,
Battle forever for the right,
And dare to do and dare to be
Whate'er is great, majestic, free!

During the exercises a dispatch was received by Dr. Deems from the commodore, wishing "peace and good will toward all men," and subsequently another by Bishop McTyeire congratulating all concerned on the joyous occasion in the following words: "We send greeting to you all. May your institution be ever blessed by the great Governor of all things."

The speakers made glowing references to the generosity of Mr. Vanderbilt, and many and fervent prayers were offered on his behalf. But as the addresses of Monday, as well as the sermons, are to be published in pamphlet form, we forbear any further reference to them. At the close of the exercises the board of trust and faculties, by formal resolution, rendered thanks to the distinguished preachers and speakers, and requested from them copies of their sermons and addresses. They also tendered well-deserved thanks to the marshals and ushers who so handsomely performed their delicate duties, and to the choir for discoursing beautiful music on the occasion.

We cannot close our brief account of the dedication and inauguration exercises without paying a tribute to Maj. Weakley and his aids, who acted as marshals and ushers on the occasion. Under their management everything moved like clock-work—and, by the way, with clock-work, for the tower clock regulated the time, and its sweet-toned bell sent out mellow notes upon the still autumnal air. Everything was successfully accomplished, "so that there was no adversary nor evil occurrent." May this prove an omen of the prosperous career of "Our Vanderbilt!"

On Tuesday morning a large number of fine-looking young men gathered together in the chapel, preparatory to matriculation. All the professors were on the platform. Bishop Paine—the venerable senior Bishop of the church, who has taken so much interest in this great enterprise—read a lesson from the Scriptures and offered a most fervent prayer. He then delivered a fatherly address to the students, giving them such counsels as could come alone from one who had been himself for a long series of years successfully engaged in the work of educating the young. The chancellor then made a brief address, and the work of matriculation at once was begun.—Nashville Christian Advocate.

Letter from Alabama.

MR. EDITOR: We have been greatly cheered by Bro. Ross' accounts of the work of grace in east Alabama, written in his own easy, graceful and graphic style. If he would write oftener the church would be glad and edified, for his deep personal experiences at the fountain of truth are reflected in his writings, and impart a fervor to what he says not observed in the productions of a majority of writers.

The flame of which he speaks has not been confined exclusively to the east, though the glare and effect seem to have been greater there than elsewhere in the State. At different points in Alabama there have been meetings of considerable interest, where numbers were converted, some of them men of mature age and position. Indeed, as far as I have observed, the meetings this year have been noted for the addition to the church of men advanced in life and of settled habits. Does this indicate that the work of the Spirit in conviction has been specially powerful? There has been no general awakening, but there have been conversions in unusual quarters. Not long ago I baptized a man sixty-five years old, and two others who were over forty. May we not hope that all this points to a fuller and more general baptism of the Spirit in the not distant future?

I have just returned from a camp meeting in Monroe county, where the presence and power of the Spirit were manifest. It is true that up to the time I left—which was before the meeting closed—there had been but few conversions and additions to the church; but it was evident there was a general and deep awakening among the unconverted who were present. On Monday we had a drizzling rain all the morning, but the people repaired to the stand—a bush arbor—and listened eagerly to the preaching of the word, apparently unmindful of the dripping from above, and of the threatening, watery clouds. At the close of both the eight and eleven o'clock services the large altar was filled with penitents, who appeared to be deeply moved. The church received a fresh baptism, and many rejoiced aloud. It was indeed refreshing to hear so many praising and thanking God for his presence and grace.

I had to leave just as the feeling and interest were becoming general, but from the condition of matters then I am satisfied the meeting closed with most satisfactory results. Up to that time, considering everything, the meeting was a decided success. Bro. Joseph M. Scott, of the Sepulga circuit, had charge, and was ably assisted in preaching and altar work by Bros. M. Graham, Jordan, Skipper, Gillis, Peavy and Rencher, of the Conference, and by several local brethren. Bro. Scott has the elements of a commander, as was evident from his admirable management of the meeting. At five in the morning the horn sounded to get up for prayers in the tents, according to the old style, and the rule was inflexibly enforced with the preachers. Previous habits, a plea for a little more slumber, and hints of a slight headache, were not regarded. After the blowing of the horn there was no more sleeping in the preachers' tent. They must set an example and lead the people in prayer.

The order all the time was excellent—perhaps never better. There were no special rules, no police. The pastor said to the people that all were expected to observe the proprieties of the occasion, and they did so. I have never, under such circumstances, preached to a more respectful and attentive congregation.

There was but one drawback to the pleasure of the occasion—the absence of the presiding elder, Bro. Shores, who is still confined to his room on account of recent injuries. His son and daughter, however, were there, and the former shared largely in the baptism of the Spirit. From what we learned of his present condition we cherish some hope that Bro. Shores may be able to walk again.

At the request of Bro. Scott I went to the camp meeting, and shall ever be thankful to Providence for the privilege. It was a new region to me, and I was favorably impressed with all I saw. The population is dense, the health seems to be good, and the lands productive and in demand. I was surprised to learn that they sold readily at from $5 to $10 per acre, and that many places could not be bought at those prices. Every few miles you can find a church with a large membership. The people are mostly well-to-do farmers, who live at home, in plain style, and raise their own supplies. A great deal of sorghum is seen, reminding one of Confederate times; and here and there you meet with a patch of real sugar-cane. I am told that Alabama will this year raise a large portion of the syrup needed for home consumption.

The idea of establishing a camp ground in that section was a happy one, for it is much needed to bring the members of the different charges together, to get acquainted with each other, compare views and liberalize one another. It is well to go from home sometimes, and see how others live and act, that our own methods of living and acting may be improved. While the church there is numerically strong, and by no means poor, they are not up with the spirit of the age in liberality and enterprise. The annual contributions to the collections ordered by the Conference never have been large, and the support of the ministry has been rather limited. To bring about a general improvement in these particulars, and specially to convert the people to God, Bro. Scott, aided by several enlightened and zealous brethren, in the face of some opposition and many misgivings, projected the "Asbury camp ground," which they now hope to make permanent. This was the first meeting, and as yet everything about the grounds is crude and primitive. A hastily erected bush arbor, with log and slab seats, was the place for public worship. A number of board shelters, inclosed with bagging, several cloth tents, and twenty or more wagon camps, afforded lodging and resting-places at night. The tenters were hospitable, and freely gave of their bounty to feed the people. There were no hoarding tents, and consequently the influence of a generous hospitality could be used in bringing men to Christ. I have thought that boarding tents at camp meetings are a mistake, as they encourage loungers who, paying their way, want to have their way, and are not therefore very subject to the advice and control of those who go there for religious purposes. But when a man is the guest of another he is bound to respect his suggestions, if not his solicitations.

The "Asbury camp ground" is admirably located, and ought to be one of the largest and most popular in the Conference. It is surrounded by churches, and is a central point for the Sepulga, Pineville, Camden, Monterey and Evergreen circuits. It is twenty-five miles west of Greenville, thirty-two northeast of Monroeville, and twelve miles south of Pineapple, the present terminus of the Selma and Gulf railroad. It is on the old federal road from Greenville to Claiborne, and is near the point where Monroe, Wilcox, Butler and Conecuh counties come together. A beautiful and well-wooded site has been obtained. Five cold springs gush from the ground a few feet from the north line of the tents, affording an ample supply of pure and excellent water. The congregation this year, on Sunday, considering the circumstances, was immense. The crowd at the Seashore last year would not compare with it in numbers. In every conceivable mode of conveyance the people came by thousands from the surrounding country. The brethren in that section will be blind to their religious prosperity if they do not erect an arbor and many permanent tents before another season. Lumber is convenient, abundant and cheap, I am told.

My visit throughout was most agreeable. I received many courtesies from both preachers and people. At Pineapple I was received as a brother and kindly entertained by W. H. Lloyd, who, with his excellent wife, represents Methodism at that misnamed place. He is an offshoot from Primitive Baptist stock, being a son of the Rev. Mr. Lloyd, who compiled and published the excellent hymn-book of that denomination. In coming among us he brought with him some of his Hard-Shell nature, only it is hard as to the truthfulness and propriety of all Methodist doctrines and usages. He says his wife had nothing to do in making him a Methodist, as he was one before his marriage; but I suspect she has had something to do in confirming him in the faith. He is the druggist of the village, and is also an amateur bee-raiser. He has bee books, bee magazines, new styles of bee-hives, and is prepared to tell you all about bees. Having procured an Italian queen bee, he is rapidly filling all his hives with bees of that kind, which are somewhat larger, more docile and greater honey producers than the ordinary bees. He greatly astonished me by his statements of the yield of honey from a hive of common size. He uses honey frames in his hives, which can be separately removed, and by means of a "honey extractor" or "slinger" throws the honey out without breaking the comb. The frames are then put back in the hive to be refilled, which is quickly done. The same comb is made to last for years, and the bees are thus kept all the time making honey, which is a great gain, as they ordinarily occupy about seven-eighths of their time in making the honey cells. I believe that was his statement. Why cannot our people diversify their labor and give us everything at home? Our fruitful clime is fitted by nature to make us the most independent and comfortable people in the world.

In Selma we are moving along quietly. The church is at peace, and doing tolerably well considering everything. Nearly one hundred of our members during the last two years have been forced, by the stress of the times, to seek homes and employment elsewhere. Their names are still on our roll, and we hope an era of prosperity will bring most of them back again. For several years after the war the tendency of the people was to the towns and cities, and hence city churches grew rapidly. For two years past, in this section at least, the tide has been flowing the other way. With a few exceptions there have been no great revivals in the cities of the South since the panic. Why is this, while the country in many places has been blessed? Is it because the cities have felt the pressure most, and the public mind has been so absorbed with the general calamity that it could not throw off the burden to engage heartily and without distraction in the work of a great revival? No one ever heard of a revival during a yellow fever or cholera epidemic. Is this because the heart and mind cannot be occupied with two great matters at once?

The crops around here are the best for years, trade is reviving and the people are more hopeful.

M. S. ANDREWS.

P. S.—A note from Rev. Moses Padgett, just received, informs me that the camp meeting closed with glorious results. He says that on the last night there were forty conversions. "The Holy Ghost seemed to come down as on the day of Pentecost. I saw one hundred persons shouting and praising God at the same time. Some of the brightest conversions I ever witnessed."

SELMA, ALA., October 7, 1875.

From Yazoo City, Miss.

MR. EDITOR: Our city and county is somewhat excited in consequence of the pending election. The white people are determined to throw off the galling yoke of Radical rule. They are moderate but firm. There is no "reign of terror," as has been represented to exist here. All good citizens, white or colored, are in perfect safety here. Registration is going on in this place now, and all are permitted, without molestation, to come forward and register, if of right they ought. The white people are not to blame for any troubles that do exist or may have existed.

Yours fraternally,

THE Congregationalist says: Mr. P. T. Barnum has recently paid $20,-000 for a living hippopotamus for his traveling menagerie. This animal was caught in the River Nile when quite young, and was brought over the Great Desert on the back of a camel, accompanied by a drove of goats to supply it with milk, so difficult is it to get one of these curious animals into Europe alive. Only one has ever before reached America, although during the last fifteen years Mr. Barnum has made a standing offer of £20,000 in gold for a full-grown hippopotamus. The present animal will nearly attain its growth by April next, but, being now under size, only $20,000 was paid for it.

I AM THE WAY, THE TRUTH AND THE LIFE.

The way is dark, the wild winds rave:
Light guides my feet no more;
My soul is tossed upon the wave,
And vainly seeks the shore.
My Savior, 'tis thy voice I hear:
"I am the way." My path is clear.

The truth is dimmed, obscured her light:
Blindly we grope our way
'Mid error's mists and falsehood's night,
And, longing, look for day.
"I am the truth." To thee we come:
Savior, this truth will guide us home.

Life's dream is o'er—our days are done,
Our numbered years have fled,
Earth's empty vanities are flown,
Our hearts and hopes are dead.
"I am the life." At length we see,
Savior, our life is found in thee.

Women Preachers.

MR. EDITOR: In these "latter days" of presumption and fanaticism there is danger to the church of God from some who profess to be her friends and supporters. Therefore we should appeal to the Holy Scriptures to settle matters of faith and practice. In the appeal to the Infallible standard the question of women preachers is forever fixed and settled; for it cannot be shown from the sacred volume that a woman was ever authorized to preach, in the sense in which a man was authorized and commanded. Jesus Christ selected and sent forth twelve men as his apostles, and commanded them to "go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" but not a word about a woman to go and preach! Why that? When Christ triumphed over all the powers of opposition, and led captivity captive, then he gave gifts unto men. "He gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers, for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ," etc. In all the above specified gifts only men are mentioned, and nothing said of women. Therefore women preachers are not the "gift" of Christ to the church, their professions and claims to the contrary notwithstanding. The "gifts" of Christ are the appointed and authorized agencies in "perfecting saints," in "the work of the ministry," and in "edifying the body of Christ," and all not his "gifts" will have the contrary effect.

Throughout the entire Old Testament record there is not an instance given of a woman who was called to and authorized to officiate at the altar of God. Never was one authorized to act as Levite, priest or high priest. Nor were any of the Old Testament Scriptures written by a woman.

Nowhere does the New Testament give an instance of a woman who was authorized to preach or teach, or to take charge of a church as pastoress. Nor was any part of the New Testament written by an inspired woman. The Apostle Paul gives the characteristics of "a bishop," but not a word about a bishopess. He also says much concerning "a deacon," but nothing about a deaconess. Further, he says: "A bishop must be the husband of one wife," but not a word about a bishopess being the wife of one husband. Also a "deacon" must have but one wife, but nothing about a deaconess being the wife of one husband. All of which show that the inspired apostle did not contemplate women preachers, and therefore was not authorized to make provision for them. Hence all women who take upon themselves the office and "work of the ministry of Christ" are guilty of innovation upon the directions and rule of the New Testament.

But in these days those who say they are called to the work of preaching endeavor to find the ground of their authority in the Bible facts of prophetesses. This appeal will avail nothing to the women preachers of our times who go about preaching. The prophetesses spoken of in the Bible were never sent to any church, people or country. They always furnished the true traits of character so beautifully portrayed by the Apostles Paul and Peter. Besides, the word prophetess does not of itself convey the idea of modern preaching. In the New Testament account of inspired utterances there are as grand and beautiful truths uttered by women not called by the title of prophetess as by those bearing the title. The glorious and lofty utterances of inspired truth by Elizabeth, the mother of John the Baptist, and Mary, the mother of Christ (neither of whom bears the title prophetess,) stand equal to any recorded in the Old or New Testament Scriptures, uttered by women who had the title. "Anna, a prophetess," is mentioned in the gospels. How did she serve God and the church? Luke tells us she "departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayers night and day." The conduct of this holy woman is strictly in accordance with the primary signification of the word prophet, and it is a withering blast to the assumptions and declarations of the women preachers of this day and country. What is the primary meaning of the word prophet? To settle this question from the Bible standpoint, let us turn to Genesis xx, 7, which reads thus: "Now, therefore, restore the man (Abraham) his wife; for he is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live." In this Scripture the work of prayer seems to be the chief duty of a prophet. Upon this passage Dr. A. Clarke remarks: "Abraham certainly was not a prophet in the present general acceptation of the term, and for the Hebrew nabi we must seek some other meaning. I have, in a discourse entitled 'The Christian Prophet and his Work,' proved that the proper ideal meaning of the original word is to pray, entreat, make supplication," etc. This definition by the learned Dr. Clarke shows that the Hebrew word rendered prophet means to pray. This definition is supported by both Moses and Luke. This definition, as it relates to prophetess, harmonizes the whole Bible account of the work of women in the church of God. While Paul would "not suffer a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority," yet he nowhere objected to a woman praying in the church, and thus to be a helper in the gospel, "a servant of the church."

The sum of all is this: The Bible nowhere permits or authorizes women preachers, but all through its history permits and authorizes women to pray in the public congregations, and to glorify God in their spirits and bodies, and then to go shouting home to heaven.

ANGUS DOWLING.

A Plea for the Children.

Suffer the little children to come unto me.—Mark x, 14.

A child is helpless and dependent; therefore it claims our affectionate regard.

Here, if anywhere, is happiness. All the recollections of matured life pay homage to the bliss of early days; and old age kneels at memory's shrine, and offers the incense of praise from the censer of a mellow heart.

The joy of some little ones is poisoned at the fountain-head. Their parentage and home influences are painful to contemplate. All around the chilly frosts and snows of adverse fortune stand prepared to blight the flower as soon as its fragrant petals open to the sunshine and dew of heaven. Let it not be said of us that by our neglect we abridged this natural period of life's sunniest scenes and brightest joys in the life of any under our care.

In the child there is complete innocence.

If there is no virtue, character, dignity, honor, it is morally certain there is no guilt—no practiced dissimulation, no artful guile, no inveterate sensuality. If its life be immediately extinguished, it will be immediately translated to eternal glory. To preserve the innocence of little children should be the anxious wish of all who have the oversight of them. They come into the world as innocents. Their progress through it should be the same, and their departure as guileless as their earliest day.

How affecting it is to sit and listen to the good in their last moments! What stress they lay on their early piety! How they cherish the memory, and fall asleep thanking God for religious childhood! The wicked also, in life's last, hard hour, often affectingly and pitifully wish they could retrace their steps, banish painful memories, erase the earliest willful sins, and often exclaim:

"Oh! for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!"

There are thousands of living confirmations of the celestial axiom: "Train up a child," etc.

The child may err—who is infallibly wise? It may stray—who is perfect? It may pollute its garments; for, alas! unwatchful moments, inbred depravity, malignant spiritual foes attend on its footsteps. But, oh! ye praying parents, your children of many prayers—those whose infant heads have been baptized with your tears, whose cheeks have felt your warm kisses—despair not. They will not utterly forsake and forget the paths of heavenly truth.

In the child we have the young immortal. Most solemn thought! How this thought enhances the duty of bringing the children to Jesus.

When the stars are extinguished; the sun has ceased to shine, the heavens have passed away, and all nature is dissolved, those children's souls shall live on and on.

The end of things is most important; for "as the tree falls, so it will lie;" and the last phases of human character afford the clearest indication of the coming fate. But the beginnings are likewise of importance. The tree was once a plant, the flower a seed, and the matured and departing mortal was once a little child. Early impressions are of unfading interest and importance. I do not say that such impressions can compel a free being to moral good or evil, but they exercise a power which no thinking mind can contemplate with a trifling spirit. If these impressions are good, what good may not ensue? If evil, what picture too dark to prefigure their end?

Oh! my Christian friends, I would call you to duty to-day. The children are weak—they need your assistance. The monster sin, in all its seductive and hideous forms, surrounds them. Incarnate devils, in the shape of men and women, are endeavoring to draw them into the dance of death. There is in their hearts a well-spring of depravity, which only needs a connecting channel to cause it to flow into the river of destruction; a hidden mine of explosive moral contagion, requiring only the match of the destroyer to blow them into the flames of hell.

I appeal to the church of Christ to do more to bring the children to Jesus. It is your incumbent duty. Ministers of Christ's church, shepherds of God's Israel, neglect not the lambs for whom the Savior died. Teachers of the little ones, carry sunshine into your class, Christ's love to their hearts, and carry the children ever at the bottom of your own hearts. O mothers of Israel, daughters of Zion, what shall I say to you? The moral destiny of the infant world is largely committed to your care. "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." Be careful, then, for you may by your songs and prayers draw a Moses to your breast, or by the absence of these influences rock a Herod to sleep!

Books Wanted.

MR. EDITOR: I have read lately several articles in religious papers on the subject of books for young ministers. They all had the right ring, and they ought to do good. They tell us that young ministers, more than almost any other class of people, need books, and are least able to get them. In most instances young ministers commence their life-work without books and without money. While they are single their salaries are small because of that fact. When they marry and have families their allowance is only sufficient to support them, and sometimes not adequate for this purpose. It would be something odd to hear a board of stewards inquiring how much the preacher needed to buy books.

The young preacher's embarrassment on account of this want is not sufficiently appreciated. What is required of him is not duly contrasted with what he has the ability to do. He must stand an approved examination on a prescribed course of study, whether he has one cent to invest in books or not. Then people are not satisfied if their minister is not a cultivated man. And the minister himself feels that his usefulness is lessened by the lack of facilities of study.

What is the remedy? Give your minister more pay. Every blessing comes by a sacrifice. But there are many charges too poor to increase salaries—to do more than keep their pastors from starving. Then here is another remedy. In many houses there are excellent standard works—histories, works on science, theological books, etc.—that are useless to the owners. The preacher sees them there, longs for them, but is too modest to say he needs them. His only consolation is to note the title, with the hope of one day being able to buy a copy. In many instances, I doubt not, these books would be freely given if their owners only knew they were needed. If times are too hard to give books away, let them go as a part of his salary, rather than give him nothing at all. But there are persons in every charge well able to give their pastors books, or, what is better, the money to buy such as he needs. Our young ministers sometimes are compelled to purchase books on credit, and then they are harassed about paying for them on account of short allowance. Here is an evil, and it needs a remedy. It is my opinion that it would be greatly remedied if the people would only bestow some thought on it. Let the people remember that the pastor has other cares besides that of providing for his family, and not the least is in reference to the means by which he is to become a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

A Broken Sabbath.—No. 2.

But we will come nearer home. All of our wonderful waters know no Sabbath. All of our beautiful lakes, some of them so large that they have been called "inland seas," have no Sabbath; and were they instinct with life they would murmur their complaint to Heaven, because of no rest on God's holy day. And so it is with all of our beautiful gulfs and bays. All of these could be navigated during the working days of the week, and there is no necessity for navigating them on the Lord's day, only that money can be made by so doing.

Any trip that can be made in six days should be made without sailing on the Sabbath; and thus our ships and steamers, and all smaller craft, should honor God by lying by on his appointed day of rest. O how it would honor him if the silent masts of all of our shipping stood still in all of our ports, and told to all nations that those who "go down to the sea" fear God! And there would be an opportunity for all sailors and all passengers to observe the Sabbath, be with their families, and attend the worship of God on God's day of holy rest.

And thus it is with our noble rivers, the grandest in the world. They have no Sabbath; nor have the towns along their banks, nor have the thousands of masters, inferior officers and hands that man our river craft, nor have the great Sabbath-traveling public; and so with our railroads, and the millions that rattle over the country on the Lord's day. And thus the nation has no Sabbath and the land no rest.

With all of this Sabbath-breaking, is it a wonder that we lack prosperity? Is it a wonder that we have storms and floods, and locusts and caterpillars, and mildew and blight and ruin? Either for chastisement as sons, or for punishment as enemies, should we not expect God to check us? Why, if he did not, with the power of wicked wealth, and with the velocity of steam, we should all rush madly on to ruin.

Do we sometimes flatter ourselves that God is asleep, or gone on a journey, or gone a-hunting, and that we may do as we please? No, no. Do not let us deceive ourselves and perish.

OBITUARIES.

PIETY D. CARLTON, daughter of Madison and Eliza Carlton, was born in the State of Texas, June, 10, 1835; professed conversion in early life, at a camp meeting in her native State, and joined the Presbyterian Church. She was married to Hiram Harrison in 1853, and has one surviving child by this marriage.

She was married to Joshua R. Carlton June 1, 1864, and moved with him to Franklin parish, La., where, in her own house, she was received by Rev. J. T. Daves into the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of which she continued a worthy member until death, which event occurred August 29, 1875, leaving a husband, and five children by this marriage.

She was forward to visit the sick, relieve the poor and comfort the sorrowing. In her the minister and his family had a friend indeed. As wife and mother she was all that the best type of woman could be. As a Christian she walked with God. Though she said nothing of sanctification, her daily life and experience furnished a living illustration of that blessed doctrine. After hearing her speak in an experience meeting, a brother minister remarked that if she had Mrs. Palmer to instruct her for an hour she would profess sanctification. I replied that to have that blessing, and enjoy it and live it as she did, was of more value than many professions. She was made perfect in love in this life.

She died of typhoid fever, and was sick a full month. In the earlier days of her sickness I found her full of peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Four days before her death I visited her in company with Rev. C. W. Carter. She seemed to realize that the end was at hand, and she seemed to be in the last conflict with the tempter. She said she was not satisfied with the way she felt; that she had always looked forward to that hour with expectations of transporting happiness, but that it was not so with her. She said: "I have known all the time that I was on the safe side, and I know it now; but I am surprised that this does not make me happy." She was full of confidence and hope, but was not satisfied with her emotions. But she was greatly comforted by the prayers, songs and instructions of Bro. Carter. After this she was delirious most of the time; but in her delirium her thoughts and words were of those spiritual and eternal things on which she delighted to dwell when in health. The day before her death she seemed to be in the camp meeting altar, pointing mourners to the Savior of sinners, and pressing them to believe in Jesus.

B. F. ALEXANDER.

DIED, at his residence in Rankin county, Miss., on the fourth of September, 1875, Hon. J. B. LEWIS, in the sixty-eighth year of his age.

Few of our itinerant preachers but knew and loved him, and many, very many will say: "His house was my home." "Oh, how pleasant his 'old Virginia hospitality' always made me feel." "How sure I ever felt that his church would meet my wants." To those who love him let me say: He died as he had lived, demonstrating in his death, as in his life, the vital force of Christian character. He arranged his worldly business in the calmness and vigor of health, and then laid him down; and as he neared the portals of heaven he said to his weeping daughter: "I feel far more like shouting 'Victory' than weeping, but for your sakes I will keep calm." So consistent and earnest and aggressive was his Christian character that it seemed to his acquaintances to be an outgrowth of his very nature; while so calm and sweet and gentle was his personal character that it showed that it was swallowed up, "hid" in Christ. Learning of his illness, I hastened to his side; but within a mile of his home I met a friend, who with tears on his face said: "Our star has set. There is none to take his place." My brother (his steward) said: "I feel like an orphan," and that "Sinai church is orphaned. It has always been our custom to meet every demand made on our church. Where will we get a class-leader?"

He was born and raised in Pittsylvania county, Va.; came to Mississippi about the year 1833; married the daughter of John R. Enochs about the year 1843, soon after which he joined the church of his wife, and was converted in his saddle, while riding in the public road. (I write without notes, and from what he has told me.) He had no political aspirations, but his people always called him to the front in times of great importance. Thus he was several times chosen to the Legislature, State conventions, etc., and no stain was ever found upon his escutcheon. I remember, as a boy, a few days after his conversion, hearing him called on to pray. He repeated the Lord's Prayer. His motto was: "I will do the best I can."

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The committee appointed to draft a suitable tribute to the memory of our departed brother, JOSEPH M. RICHARDSON, offer the following as a feeble testimony to his memory as a man and a member of the church of God:

Whereas, It has pleased our heavenly Father, in his providence, to take our dear brother away from this world of labor and sorrow, we deem it but right and proper to bear testimony to his worth and cherish his memory; therefore,

Resolved, That in the death of Bro. Joseph M. Richardson our church has lost a valuable officer, this Quarterly Conference a useful member, our Sabbath school one of its most earnest and zealous teachers, and this community a good citizen.

Resolved, That the life and labors of our brother bore testimony to the truth and reality of heartfelt religion, and to the vitality of the Savior's love, in his soul, which is positive evidence in our minds that he has joined the white-robed throng, "safe in the arms of Jesus."

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the sadly bereaved family, and pray God to be husband to the widow and father to the fatherless, and that he may give them grace to meet him in the better world.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished Sister Richardson, and that the same be published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Adopted by the fourth Quarterly Conference, St. Paul's station, Mobile, Ala., September 27, 1875.

IN MEMORIAM.

In the little village of St. Joseph, Tensas parish, La., there is a beautiful home that was once the seat of love and the center of happiness. It was inhabited by a devoted brother and two gentle and loving sisters. In a little more than one brief year that charming home was made desolate by the death of those two loving sisters. They could not live without the society of each other, and the death of one doubtless caused the death of the other. Their lives were indissolubly interwoven by a network of love. Sweet and loving sisters, they have gone to the land of the leal to live together in that bright realm forever, and to form links in the broken chain of that family circle that ere long shall be reunited, link by link, until the circle shall be made perfect in the paradise of rest.

Miss ELIZA MURDOCK and Miss JANE MURDOCK were born in the land of the Shamrock, that beautiful isle of the sea—Ireland—the home of the patriot and the orator.

Language fails to convey the tribute of respect that is due to the fidelity of the noble and generous brother for his deep devotion to and tender regard for his departed sisters.

Farewell, gentle and loving sisters. Requiescat in pace.

A FRIEND.

COTTAGE HOME, LA., September 23, 1875.

A CHILD'S DEATH.

It was unexpected and sad when I heard, through a letter from my dear friend, Mrs. Virginia P. Hall, that her little daughter, LULU, was dead, at the age of seven years. I remember well the bright-eyed, beautiful child. Her mother writes me that in expectation of attending the dedication of their new church, which was to take place last Sunday, Lulu said: "Mamma, I will take papa's hand, and we will join the church—Lillie too. Can I, ma, can I?"

How unspeakably blessed and comforting to the mother's heart it is that with such heavenly impressions, wrought through parental instruction, her darling child passed from earth, and entered upon her immortal career in heaven. Jesus noticed little children on earth; he took notice of Lulu, and set her in the midst of the angel bands. Her infant hand still reaches out to take her papa's hand, and the hand of all the dearest left behind, and lead them to her side. To such a happy result may God bless and sanctify the chastening, full sore enough, I know, upon my bereaved friends.

ST. LOUIS, October 2, 1875.

MARGARET ELIZABETH FOURNIQUET, daughter of J. H. and Rebecca Foster, was born in Yazoo county, Miss., April 30, 1842, and died in the same county, near where she was raised, on the third of September, 1875. She was married twice. Her first husband was M. J. Futrell, and her second E. P. Fourniquet. When she was a girl she attended Sunday school regularly, and was a good scholar. She became religious in the morning of life, and lived a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South from that time until her death. She was favorably spoken of by those who knew her well. A short time previous to her death she assured her father and others that all was well. That God may sanctify this loss to her husband, children and other relatives is the prayer of their pastor,

A. B. STEWART.

HUGH LOUIS, son of E. P. and M. E. Fourniquet, was born on the third of November, 1874, and died on the eighth of September, 1875. He was preceded by his mother to the glory land only five days.

A. B. STEWART.

LITTLE ARTHUR T. SIMPSON, son of J. F. and Rosa Simpson, died August 21, 1875, on Bayou Waxia, after a short illness of three days, aged four years.

Little Arthur was a sprightly child, and the pet of all who knew him. For a child so young it was remarkable to witness the interest he manifested in the Sabbath school. Whenever practicable he would be present, in order, as he said, "to learn how to sing." There were a few songs he was passionately fond of, and was often found alone humming them. He lost an older brother some months ago, and during his last illness would make frequent mention of him, saying that "he was going to see his brother in heaven."

R. S. I.

DIED, at the residence of her parents, in Caddo parish, September 17, 1875, ELLEN GERTRUDE, only daughter of Claiborne J. and Eunice Burruss Foster. For the gift of this precious little child, in the six bright summers she was lent to us, we do thank our heavenly Father, and give her back in humble trust and love to the dear Jesus of whom she was always talking and singing, almost to the last conscious moment of her bright, sweet life. Of such is the Savior's kingdom.

"O say it was well, ere the splendor
Of her dawning had died into gray,
While the rose-dew of childhood was tender
She should glide through the arches of day."

AUNTIE.

LITTLE MOLLIE, daughter of T. W. and M. E. Denmmond, of Edwards' Depot, Hinds county, Miss., died September 24, 1875, aged seven years, two months and twenty days. Sweet and gentle as a little zephyr, her name was a household word with all, while her pure affection for her parents is best expressed in her mother's words: "No mother could be more assured of a child's love than I was of Mollie's. Every look of her bright countenance, every touch of her gentle hand, and every whisper of her sweet voice told me of the little darling's love."

J. M. WEEMS.

I DO not know of a more beautiful sight on earth than a man who has served his Lord for many years, and who, having grown gray in service, feels that in the order of nature he must soon be called home. He is rejoiced in the first fruits of the Spirit which he has obtained, but he is panting after the full harvest of the Spirit which is guaranteed to him. "I think I see him sitting on a jutting crag by the edge of Jordan, listening to the harps on the other side, and waiting till the pitcher shall be broken at the fountain, and the wheel at the cistern, and the spirit shall depart to God who gave it. A wife waiting for her husband's footsteps, a child waiting in the darkness of the night till its mother comes to give it the evening kiss, are portraits of our waiting. It is pleasant, and a precious thing, to wait and so to hope.—Spurgeon.

LITTLE JEANIE'S SLEEP.

BY MARGARET J. PRESTON.

How tired she was growing! It may be
God pitied so tender a sight,
And whispered: "You're weary, my baby;
So shut your sweet eyes, and good-night!"

And she shut them. Be sure that our Father,
Who guards every step that they tread,
Knows better than we when to gather
The little tired sleepers to bed.

And lying there now, 'mid the rarest
Of jasmine and snow-drops so white,
Herself the delightsomest, fairest
That ever unsheathed in our sight;

Midst the blossoms she loved in such fashion
As God loves, proclaiming them "good,"
In your hunger of ravenous passion,
Would you wake her to life—if you could?

If out the blue glory above you
The voice of the Highest were heard:
"One word, and you have her to love you Again"—would you utter the word?

Nay, never! The perfected seven
Sweet years of her sojourn below
Were haimed with the breezes of heaven;
But would it have always been so?

Like the silveriest sunbeam of morning,
Your hearts through her promise were blest;
Would you hazard the tokens of warning
That point to the clouds in the west?

O say it was well! ere the splendor
Of her dawning had died into gray,
While the rose-dew of childhood was tender,
She should glide through the arches of day.

O say that her sleep is not dreary;
It only was kindest and best
That her Father, who saw she was weary,
Should wrap her the sooner in rest.

The Pope and the Jesuits.

The London Hour publishes the following extract from a letter written by a gentleman in Rome, whose sources of information, it is asserted, may be thoroughly depended upon:

"During the reign of Pius the Ninth the governing power of the Curia Romana has been transferred to the Jesuits. The theory is that the curia is an organization of the various congregations or ministerial departments for submitting their views to and receiving their orders from the Pope. But in practice the action of the curia has come to be the action of the Jesuits. This action shapes itself diversely in different countries. For example, in Spain it openly espouses the cause of Don Carlos, while in England it takes a totally different line. The modern power of the Jesuits dates from the year 1848, when they persuaded the Pope, during the popular movements of that time, that they, and they alone, were his friends. Their flattery, that none but themselves appreciated his genius and piety, had its natural effect. Their first important step was to fill the nunciatures, or legations, and the bishoprics everywhere with persons subject to Jesuit influence. The consequence of this was the dismissal of every official suspected of a taint of liberalism. The Jesuits, who saw the Pope daily for a long period, and molded his mind to their ends, were Father Bresciani and Father Piccirillo. Their influence led to the proclamation of the Immaculate conception and the syllabus to the Vatican Council, and its declaration of the Pope's infallibility.

"To strengthen their hold these men brought to Rome, and published just below the Vatican, their organ, the Civilta Cattolica. By degrees all the surroundings of the Pope became more and more Jesuitical, each episcopal vacancy, as it occurred, being filled by a prelate with Jesuit tendencies. These things so annoyed the cardinals that they nominated Patrizi Cardinal Vicar of Rome on purpose that he might have the daily opportunity of seeing the Pope, and influencing his administration. In the College of Cardinals itself opposition to the Jesuits was declared, and Cardinal d'Andrea went to Naples, and there published a protest, which greatly irritated the Pope. He was allured back to Rome by the promise that, if he would remain quiet, nothing would be said of his indiscretion; but his first interview with the Pope was so stormy that the cardinal took to his bed, and shortly died, it is said, from the effects of his contumacy. Cardinal Barrilli, warned by this event, said: 'I will keep my opinions to myself.'

"The council was subjected to a complete system of Jesuit espionage, and upon every prelate of eminence some Jesuit agent was fastened. Jesuit influence has equally affected all the recent sittings of the consistory and the nomination of bishops. Many of the English bishops sent the strongest possible remonstrance to the Pope against the elevation of Manning to the cardinalate; and the election was secured by the Jesuit influence, so that Manning is pledged to do all in his power to bring about their ends. The Jesuits are thus de facto the Catholic Church, since the white Pope, Pius the Ninth, is but the instrument of the black Pope, Father Beckx. Wherever the Jesuits are attacked, precisely the same results will follow that Bismarck began to experience three years ago when he commenced his anti-Jesuit campaign.

"These considerations are important for the statesmen in those countries in which the inevitable contest has begun, or is about to begin. It is doubtful whether, if the Pope died to-morrow, an Ultramontane or a Jesuit successor would follow. Cardinal Franchi, with Jesuit tendencies, believes that he would be elected. The Jesuits have led Manning to believe that he has the best chance. Should a new batch of cardinals be created, the Jesuit influence will then so decidedly predominate that the election of a Jesuit Pope will be inevitable, and that will be the beginning of the end. Should another than an Italian be elected, an open schism of the non-Jesuit Italian cardinals is not an improbable event. In that case a fierce domestic war in every household professedly Catholic would ensue. The Jesuits declare that they look with hope to England. Sincere and humble Christians of all persuasions also look to England, hoping to find her, as heretofore, the champion of intellectual, moral and religious life and light."

Old Treasures Recovered in Athens, Greece.

A most important discovery was recently made in the exploration at the outer Cerameicus. When about thirty feet beyond the old city wall toward Piræus the workmen came upon a cubical block of apparently solid masonry under ten or eleven feet of earth. On removing a portion of this masonry a most beautiful marble sarcophagus, nine feet long, four broad and six deep, was revealed. It was shaped like an empty sofa or couch, with a large flat pillow (with a tassel) at the right hand, lying upon a luxurious-looking mattress, along the rounded edge of which are carved alternately four bands, containing vine, olive, rose and oak leaves, and four squares with sea nymphs and tritons in various positions. The back and extremities of the couch are raised, and on the outside of each end are three large diamond-shaped panels surrounded with roses. The whole is apparently supported upon four massive legs which terminate in lions' feet; while all around below the mattress, in imitation of hanging drapery, are curiously twisted fluted lines, and at the bottom, forming the lower edge, is a band of oak leaves with running stags and dogs at the corners. On the front of the curved arms of the couch are olive berries and leaves, and herons with their long beaks and legs curiously entwined, as we see in old manuscripts. The whole sarcophagus, formed of two enormous blocks of Pentelic marble, without a stain, is in the highest style of art and in the most perfect state of preservation. On removing the upper slab, which, being of huge size and ponderous substance, was a work of no little difficulty, there were seen a male and female skeleton lying side by side, almost perfect, though without hair or integument, or indeed anything, except the following beautiful and costly objects:

1. A pair of pendants for the ears, each three centimes long, and formed in two parts, connected by a loop hinge, the upper being a small cube and the lower a long and short pyramid, connected at their bases, the whole being of solid gold, and so heavy as to be suggestive of considerable punishment to the wearer.

2. Two beautiful octagonal, open-work bracelets of the same pattern and exquisite design and finish, having hinges at the outer and inner edges, the pin of one of which, being movable, permits the bracelets to be opened and closed. The work is composed of long, square bars, which on each of the eight facets are formed into an antique Greek letter, and either bracelet contains a proper name.

3. Two massive rings of gold (armlets,) with ten regular protuberances on the outer surface, each of which originally contained blue glass or enamel intaglios; one of Artemis (?) still remains tolerably intact; many, however, are too imperfect to be deciphered, and some have entirely disappeared.

4. A large plain sheet of gold, of long, oval shape, and perforated at each extremity. It is twenty-four centimeters in length by six in width, and about the thickness of cartridge paper, and appears to have been an adornment worn over the brow.

5. A hollow, spherical pin-head, having five facets and a short tube. On the facets are sockets which once probably contained gems, but, if so, they have disappeared. This may have been the beautiful head of an ivory or ebony pin for fastening the hair.

6. A gold coin, about the size of a sixpence, in perfect preservation, with a head and the words "Hadrian—August," on the front, and trophy of arms on the reverse. This gives an approximate idea of the date of the sepulcher.

7. Four pieces of twisted fine gold wire, thirty-six centimeters long, probably used for fastening the gold plate. This completes the list of precious articles, which weigh altogether nearly a pound of very pure gold, and are as bright and polished as on the day they left the hand of the jeweler. There is, besides the above, only a small plaster medal, thickly gilt, the design of which is obscure, a little cross-shaped morsel of gold tinsel, found on the spinous process of the seventh cervical vertebra, and seven pieces of silk thread, the surface of which was covered with gold.—Correspondent of the London Times.

Reminiscence of the Revolution.

Rev. Judah Champion was settled in Litchfield, Conn., at the beginning of the American Revolution. Rev. J. T. Headley gives the following interesting reminiscences of those days in the New York Observer:

One pleasant Sabbath morning the congregation gathered together, and had just commenced the morning hymn, when through the still streets there came the sharp clatter of a horse's hoofs—always so ominous, at that time, of tidings from the army. As usual, when the courier arrived in any town on the Sabbath he made straight for the "meeting-house." Reaching the door, he dismounted, and, flinging the bridle over the horse's neck, entered the building. The singing ceased, and every eye was turned on the stranger as he walked up the broad aisle and ascended the pulpit stairs. He handed a paper to Mr. Champion, who, with a smile of triumph on his face, arose and read: "St. John's is taken." It must be remembered that this place had been besieged six weeks, till people began almost to despair of its ever being taken. The noble pastor, the moment he had finished the sentence, lifted his eyes to heaven and exclaimed: "Thank God for the victory!" The chorister, sitting opposite the pulpit, in the gallery, clapped his hands and shouted: "Amen and amen!" For awhile the joy was unrestrained, but he soon checked it by saying: "There was something more to be heard." He then read a lengthy communication, stating that the army was in a suffering condition. It was now the latter part of November, and there, on the borders of Canada, the winter was already setting in, and yet the troops were about to march for Quebec, to undergo the rigors of a winter campaign. It described in vivid language their suffering condition. They were destitute of clothing, without shoes or stockings, and yet were ordered to traverse the frozen fields of the North.

The touching description lost none of its pathos as read by the pastor, and commented on by him at its close. When he had finished there was hardly a dry eye in the house. Especially the women were overcome with emotion. As soon as the congregation was dismissed a few prominent ladies were seen to gather round the young pastor with eager countenances. They were evidently asking him some questions, and it was equally evident, from his benevolent smile and nodding head, that he was answering them satisfactorily. Soon they began to move rapidly among the other women that, in turn, gathered into groups in earnest conversation. After a little while they all dispersed to their homes. When the congregation assembled for the afternoon service not a woman was in the church. The wives, mothers and maidens had laid aside their Sabbath apparel, and drawn forth their spinning-wheels, set in motion their looms, and brought out their knitting-needles and handcards, and the village suddenly became a hive of industry. On that usually still, Puritan Sabbath afternoon there now rung out on every side the hum of the wheel and the click of the shuttle—sounds never before heard in Litchfield on the Sabbath day, and which contrasted strangely with those of prayer and praise in the adjoining sanctuary. Yet both believed that they were serving God. The women were working for those brave patriots who were about to march, destitute and barefoot, over the frozen ground to strike for freedom. Many years after, when a venerable old man, Mr. Champion was asked by his granddaughter how he could approve such a desecration of the Sabbath. He turned on her a solemn look, and replied simply: "Mercy before sacrifice."

About Bananas.

Few people who see bananas hanging in fruit stores think of them as more than a tropical luxury. In fact they are a staple article of food in some parts of the world, and, according to Humboldt, an acre in bananas will produce as much food for man as twenty-five acres of wheat. It is the ease with which bananas are grown which is the great obstacle to civilization in some tropical countries. It is so easy to get a living without work that no effort will ever be made, and the men become lazy and intolerably shiftless. All that is needed is to stick a cutting in the ground. It will ripen its fruit in twelve to thirteen months, without further care, each plant having seventy-five to one hundred and twenty-five bananas; and when that dies down, after fruiting, new shoots sprung up to take its place. In regions where no frost ever reaches, bananas are found in all stages of growth, ripening their fruit every month and every day in the year. Col. Whitner, near Silver Lake, Fla., has probably the largest banana plantation in the United States, containing fully ten thousand plants in bearing. Some of these are large trees, which do not die after bearing their fruit, but the majority are of the dwarf species, which are renewed every year. Slips are planted about eight feet apart, and rapidly push up leaves, disclosing six or eight small bananas behind this protection. Some plants will have sixteen or twenty leaves and branches of fruit, bending over as it ripens, forming a most beautiful sight. The culture of bananas is very profitable, and with the unlimited capacity of Florida and the West India Islands for producing it, there should always be a supply equal to any possible demand.—Rural New Yorker.

FROM philosophy, from poetry and from art is heard the acknowledgment that there is no repose for the rational spirit but in moral truth. The testimony that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together is as loud and convincing from the domain of letters as it is from the cursed and thistle-bearing ground. From the immortal longing and dissatisfaction of Plato, down to the wild and passionate restlessness of Byron and Shelley, the evidence is decisive that a spiritual and religious element must enter into the education of man in order to inward harmony and rest.—Dr. Shedd.

CONSCIOUSNESS of unbelief is a sign of actual faith. Infidels are never troubled with unbelief. Dead men never feel cold. Frozen feet never ache. And a soul given up to ungodliness, and bound hand and foot in sin, has no trouble with unbelief. It is only when faith shoots its first illuminated ray into the darkened heart that the baleful presence of unbelief is made manifest. It is only when the troubled soul can say, "I do believe," that it starts back at the abyss of doubt which that first gleam of faith discloses, and exclaims: "Help thou my unbelief!"

GOD never takes back his gifts. If he ever gave you a sight of his truth and love, you have it still. Clouds may pass between you and the sun, but the sun is there, and will shine forth again. It may be a stormy night, and the stars are hidden; but they shine on, permanent and pure, behind the driving rain, and will again look out upon you with their calm eyes, and say, from their inaccessible and infinite heights: "Be patient, little child! be patient! and wait till all storms and all darkness shall have passed away forever."

THERE is no vice so simple but assumes some mark of virtue on its outward parts.

Religious Intelligence.

—Six hundred missionaries, with three thousand native helpers, is the numerical force to carry the gospel to India's 300,000,000 of people.

—Alderman Carlile, of Belfast, Ireland, is erecting a Wesleyan church as a memorial of an only son, of much promise. It is said it will be the finest structure occupied by the denomination in the United Kingdom.

—The Nova Scotia Baptist missionaries who went to Siam, with the intention of choosing their field of labor, have opened their mission among the Teloogoos, on the western shore of the Bay of Bengal, a short distance north of the River Godavery.

—The presiding Protestant Episcopal Bishop has called a special meeting of the House of Bishops, in Grace church, New York, on Thursday, October 28, at ten o'clock, for the purpose of electing missionary bishops for Africa and China, and also of receiving the report of the Mexican commission.

—An article in the Brooklyn Eagle, on the choirs and choir music of the City of Churches, says there are in that city 225 churches, whose aggregate expenditure for music is annually $170,850, or an average of about $750.10 to each church. The most expensive choir costs about $8,000, the next $6,000, the next $5,000, and so they run down the scale to nearly nothing.

—A priest, who has recently abandoned the Romish faith, says that the Catholics of this country are greatly over-estimated as to number. Even calculating in their manner—that is, every man, woman and child—we will not find 5,000,000. Of the children they lose at least fifty per cent.—seventy-five per cent. of boys and twenty-five per cent. of girls.

—The Methodist Church is accomplishing a good work in Australia. It has three Conferences, all flourishing. Strange enough, the first Methodist preacher there was a convict. He was under sentence of death in England for murder. He was converted, and became so thoroughly changed that through the intercession of friends his sentence was commuted to banishment.

—The Pope held a consistory September 17, and conferred upon Cardinal McCloskey the ring and the title of Santa Maria Sopra Minerva, or Holy Mary above Minerva. This is the name of the church at Rome to which his red-caped eminence is assigned. It is said to be one of the most beautiful churches of the city, to occupy the site of an ancient temple of Minerva (whence its name,) and to bear a water gauge which records the height of the Tiber.

—A foreign friend writes: "When Signor Grassi recently gave an account to his congregation in Rome of the meetings he attended in Brighton, London, Leicester and Wisbeach, many in the congregation rose and expressed sorrow for their past indecision and want of faith, and pledged themselves not only to abandon Catholicism, but also to make manifest in their lives their faith in the gospel. Six priests of the Romish Church came somewhat secretly to read the Bible with him, one of whom is the brother-in-law of the Pope's private secretary."

ST. ALBAN'S, LONDON.—Rev. Mr. Mackonochie, who was silenced by the Privy Council, has recommenced his antics at St. Alban's. On entering that church the first thing that attracted attention was the bright appearance of the altar, which was decorated with flowers. Only two candles were lighted, but the "sanctuary" was further illuminated by several lamps, suspended from the ceiling. Mr. Mackonochie himself read the service. He wore a richly colored chasuble, ornamented with a large cross on the back, and during the consecration prayer maintained the "eastward position."

OLD CATHOLICS.—According to the official report on the Synod of Old Catholics, held at Bonn June 19, 20 and 21 of this year, there were at the time of the synod of 1874 in Prussia 17,038 souls in the Old Catholic communities, against 18,765 in the same communities this year. The number of men in 1874 was 4,581; it is this year 6,030, an increase of at least 33 per cent. In Prussia, Hessen, Baden and Bavaria together there are not less than 45,566 souls, 14,588 independent men, who subscribe to Old Catholicism. The increase in the number of souls for the provinces in question is, since last year, 9,803; of independent men, 4,151.

THE SOUTHERN PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.—There are 10 churches in the Southern Assembly that have more than 400 members each; 14 have between 300 and 400, and 51 have between 200 and 300 members. The following are the statistics of a few of the larger churches, taken from the minutes of the last General Assembly: The largest church is the First Presbyterian church of New Orleans, of which the Rev. B. M. Palmer, D. D., is pastor. It has 658 communicants, 7 elders and 6 deacons, and 1,609 Sunday school children. Last year 48 were added to it. Its contributions to foreign objects amounted to $4,480, and for congregational expenses, $12,000. The Walnut Street church of St. Louis, the Rev. J. H. Brookes, D. D., pastor, has 625 members in full connection, 9 elders and 10 deacons. The First Presbyterian church of Nashville, Rev. T. A. Hoyt, pastor, has 538 members, 15 elders and 13 deacons. Fifty-two persons were added to its communion during the year ending last April. It gave $5,183 to foreign missions, and $14,241 for pastor's salary, congregational and miscellaneous purposes. The Second Presbyterian church of Richmond, the Rev. M. D. Hoge, D. D., pastor, has 536 members, 5 elders and 6 deacons, and 520 children in its Sabbath schools. It contributed last year $1,987 to sustentation, etc., and $15,337 to congregational and miscellaneous objects. It received in that time 71 new members.

A CHILD'S EVENING HYMN.

BY BENJAMIN GOUGH.

Ere I lay me down to rest,
Jesus, hear a child's request;
I can only lisp my prayer,
Asking for thy love and care.
I am very young and weak;
Gentle Jesus, hear me speak;
See thy child on bended knee—
Suffer me to come to thee.

Let me now thy kindness prove—
What I want is Jesus' love;
Save thy little child from harm,
Clasp me in thy loving arm.
Ere I sleep upon my bed,
Lay thy hands upon my head;
Thy sweet blessing give to me,
Suffer me to come to thee.

Me, thy ransomed child, receive,
All my naughty words forgive;
Peace bestow and joy impart,
Sealed upon my childish heart.
Sprinkle me with thy dear blood—
Make me holy, meek and good;
Like thyself thy child would be—
Suffer me to come to thee.

O'er my bed may angels keep
Watch while I in safety sleep,
Let me rest upon thy breast,
Let my dreams be bright and blest;
When I in the morning wake,
Into thy protection take.
Till in heaven thy face I see,
Suffer me to come to thee.

Children's Friend.

From Our Little Friends.

JOHNSON'S POINT, Sept. 25, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I see several little girls and boys have been writing to you, and I concluded I would write you a little letter and see if you would publish it. I am a little girl six years old. I live at Johnson's Point—a very nice place. Our house is situated in a pretty spot, rather low, eight miles from the flourishing city of Terrell. If you ever come here you must be sure to come and see us. I have one sister and two brothers, and such a good father and mother. We take your paper. I am fond of Grandpa Goodale's stories, and am anxious to hear them every time; but I do wish he would make haste and tell us "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." I am young, and you know children haven't much patience.

Your little friend,

NINNIE SIMPSON.

LEXINGTON, MISS., October 3, 1875.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: As I have seen so many little readers writing to you, I thought I would write you a few lines. I like your paper very much—it has so many good pieces in it. I am going to school half a mile from our house. My teacher's name is Bro. Newell. He is a splendid teacher, and a preacher. We have a good Sunday school, and I believe Mr. Newell is our superintendent. As this is the first letter that I ever tried to write to you, and as I am afraid of keeping you from your business, I will bring it to a close. From your little friend,

M. E. HESTER.

A STORY FOR LITTLE SUFFERERS.

BY JENNIE HARRISON.

One day a gentleman said to me: "Don't you think it would be a good plan to write some stories for little sufferers—something for the sick children?" And I said yes; and wondered why he did not do this himself. But then he is a doctor, and takes care of the sick children, and tries to help their suffering; and so I dare say he has no time to write the stories.

And I began to think of how many little sufferers there must be in the world—so many, many sick boys and girls! Some who are being taken care of, and who hope to get well again; some who will perhaps never run about and be strong; and some who suffer without any kind doctor to help them, or any loving hands to nurse them! Oh, when I thought of them all, I longed to have a great, sweet voice which could reach wherever there was a suffering boy or girl, and tell delightful stories, to help pass away the long hours of pain and weariness. But this could not be.

So, after awhile, as I sat thinking of you, dear children, and wondering what I could say to you, what do you think? Why, there came a voice speaking to me! Not a big voice, like that which I was wishing for, but almost the very smallest voice that you can imagine, and it kept calling and calling, and at first I did not know what it was.

"What is that?" said I, looking around; "it sounded like sleigh-bells."

Then some one in the room laughed, and I saw, out of the window, that there was only the least bit of snow left on the road; so, of course, no sleigh could be coming. It wasn't loud enough for sleigh-bells either.

"It's very funny," I said again; "perhaps the noise is in my head!"

But it wasn't in my head, for when I went out of the room I did not hear it, and as soon as I came back there it was again as plain as ever.

"Now I must find out what that is," I said to myself, and I asked everybody to "hark!" while I went and opened the door of the conservatory, and looked in among my flowers. As soon as I had done that the little voice called louder than before; and then I found out what it was.

"Why, it is a cricket, a dear little cricket, chirping here among the flowers!"

"Can you see him?"

"No; I can't see him;" and so he wasn't among the flowers after all, but down in the dark, under the shelf, singing away as cheerily as if it were warm summer-time, and he could hop about among the green grass and the sunshine.

"Isn't it pretty to hear him?"

"I wonder how he got in there?"

"I wish he would come out and let us see him."

And so everybody had something to say about the cricket, and we were all quite pleased at the merry little fellow. I don't know why we hadn't heard him before, but may be he had just found out that he had something to say to us. And I think he had, for when I took out my work and sat down again, thinking about the sick boys and girls, and listening to the cricket, it seemed to me as if the little voice said: "Tell them about me! tell them about me!" Then I smiled to myself, and wondered if I could make a story for you about the cricket. And while I wondered the other little voice seemed to go on again: "Yes! yes! a true story! I'm a merry little cricket, singing here in the dark! Tell them about me!"

So I made up my mind that I would tell the children about my cricket; and I have come to do it now. I call him my cricket, for I have become quite attached to him in these few days that he has been chirping to me. And when I go in to water my flowers I think I often stay longer than I used to, just to listen to his little voice, and to find out what he is trying to say.

Now what do you think it was that this little cricket meant me to tell you? Let me see: Here is a little cricket, all alone by himself; there isn't any other cricket to help him in his song, and keep him company; there isn't any bright summer-time or golden autumn, such as crickets love; it is cold winter, and a very long winter too; there isn't any soft, green grass for him to hop about in; he is down there in the dark, under the shelves, on the bare earth. It doesn't seem a very pleasant time for a cricket, does it?

We might almost suppose that he would hop around impatiently, and wish that the summer-time would come, so that he could get out of his prison, and smell the warm, fresh air again; or at least we should think that he would shut his eyes and sleep away all the long, dreary days, and not trouble himself to sing at all.

But no, indeed! That isn't the way that my cricket does! He is a cheerful little fellow, and sings away merrily in his dark corner, not at all impatient because things are not just as he would like to have them.

I wonder how many of the sick children in the world are like this cricket?

I want you to listen a little while now as I tell you the lesson you can learn from him, and you can imagine that he is himself chirping away at you, by your bedside, or on the back of your sofa, or on the arm of your big sick-chair.

It isn't a pleasant thing to be sick, is it? No doubt you would all choose, if you could, to be well and strong, and able to run about with other boys and girls, enjoying their games, and seeing all that they see. You don't understand why you should suffer so, and have to lie in bed, and take medicines; no, neither does my cricket understand why he should be shut up in the dark, and not have any grass or sunshine. But surely, if he can be cheerful, you can too! Boys and girls know a great deal more than crickets. You know that there is one wise, good Father, who appoints everything, and understands why it is best. If he has given you pain and sickness to bear, he has some good reason for it, and loves you just the same as if he had sent you the great blessing of health. I know that you feel very tired sometimes—that the days seem dreary and the nights long. Some of you are lonely too, and people seem to forget you, because you cannot run out and show yourselves!

But never mind; there is always One watching and loving and caring for you. Remember that, and try to sing a cheerful song every day, to honor him, and show how you trust him. If you can't sing, just smile, and be patient and willing to bear whatever pain he sends you. Never mind the dark; never mind being shut up; never mind if you are lonely; never mind how long the waiting seems; just try to be cheery, contented boys and girls, keeping your lives as bright in sickness as you would in health.

Will you learn this lesson from my little cricket? I wish I could send him around to each one of you, to chirp his own little lesson to you. There he goes now! and he seems to say: "I would like to go and tell them—tell them."

I have looked under the shelves every day, hoping that I might catch a peep at him; but no! there he stays, hidden away in his dark prison, and sings and sings. I hope to-day that he has sung a song to little sufferers.—The Churchman.

A GREAT many boys mistake their calling, but all such are not fortunate enough to find out in as good season as did this one. It is said that Rufus Choate, the great lawyer, was once in New Hampshire making a plea, when a boy, the son of a farmer, resolved to leave the plow and become a lawyer like Rufus Choate. He accordingly went to Boston, called on Mr. Choate, and said to him: "I heard you plead in our town, and I have a desire to become a lawyer like you. Will you teach me how?" "As well as I can," said the great lawyer. "Come and sit down." Taking down a copy of Blackstone, he said: "Read this until I come back, and I will see how you get on." The poor boy began. An hour passed. His back ached, his head ached, his legs ached. He knew not how to study. Every moment became a torture. He wanted air. Another hour passed, and Mr. Choate came and asked: "How do you get on?" "Get on! Why, do you have to read such stuff as this?" "Yes." "How much of it?" "All there is on these shelves, and more," looking about the great library. "How long will it take?" "Well, it has taken me more than twenty-five years." "How much do you get?" "My board and clothes." "Is that all?" "Well, that is about all that I have gained as yet." "Then," said the boy, "I will go back to the plowing. The work is not near as hard, and pays better."—The Sun.

A Building of God.

October in our city is the month for moving. Most of the changes are made on the first, with sporadic cases running into November. We do not know what proportion of renters make annual moves, but it is considerable. Moving is expensive, rarely costing less than a month's rent, and frequently much more when the things broken and lost are taken into the account. Three moves are not equal to a fire, unless something is saved from the flames, but they cost a great deal. Then the weariness, vexations and hubbub attending the operation, the long time it takes to get settled after this turning of everything bottom-side up, and the wear and tear of temper and patience, are to be considered. The chief burden usually falls upon the good housewife, who, besides the direction of the moving, the toil of packing and unpacking, has to manage husband, children and servants as best she can.

Notwithstanding the trouble and cost, there is much moving. Some are compelled to seek less expensive homes, some are rising in the world and must have better establishments, and others, neither richer nor poorer than last year, hope to do better with the same money. It takes nearly a year for a tenant to find out all the objectionable features of a house, the character of his neighbors, the offensive things about him, the chimneys, the ventilation, the water supply, and a thousand little matters which the most expert house-hunter will overlook when the lease is signed. The good points of a domicile are more on the surface, and are easily taken in at a glance. Hence the temptation to make a change. The disagreeable qualities of the house we have lived in are thoroughly known. The attractive features of the new residence, however superficial, suffice to allure. Under the circumstances it is not strange that the best-balanced people are found annually flying "from the ills they know to those they know not of."

People living in rented houses feel little attachment to the places which they occupy. Nothing belongs to them. There is not a brick, a shrub or a tree that they can call their own. No two children are born under the same roof. There is not an object connected with long associations, and as the legal tenure is but for a single year it is not possible that the ties of a real homestead should be formed. There is no check upon man's natural discontent and passion for novel conditions and experiences. The average of good and evil may be about the same in homes of the same cost, but the miseries encountered are not of precisely the same nature. The newness of the situation, the pleasures of hope, the shifting of the plagues themselves, afford a temporary diversion, if not actual relief. The house this year has been damp, the walls have dripped with moisture and have been covered with a fretting leprosy. Next year the exposure is different—the rooms are hot as a furnace, dry as a bone, and, in their way, quite intolerable. Last year the house was bad, but the neighborhood was good; this year the house is good, but there are tribulations in the way of adjacent stenches and badly-drained gutters. There is always some objection, some occasion of uneasiness and dissatisfaction. If the house belonged to us we should be disposed to overlook its defects and to magnify its advantages, but as we pay somebody else for its use we very naturally do exactly the reverse. The landlords are heartless, exacting, and if we were landlords we should be the same way.

After days, and sometimes weeks, spent in house-hunting, the weary and perplexed seeker has about seen the end of all perfection. The rent bulletins teem with tempting descriptions of cozy cottages and elegant mansions, all dirt cheap, but when you come to examine the premises what a falling off is there! The splendors and beauties fade and vanish under actual inspection, and what you were led to believe was a fairy palace proves to have been a dilapidated tenement, already fully occupied by rats, roaches and other untidy creatures. The perplexing problem to solve is: A comfortable house for a considerable family, and to be obtained for a very moderate amount. We may know but too well what we want, what we must have to be exempt from serious discomfort, but the pinch lies in the effort to get it for what we can afford to pay. The legs of the lame are not equal. A short purse and a good house cannot well go together. "For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it."

This tribulation ought to have its higher lessons for us. Abraham dwelt in tabernacles, but he felt himself to be a pilgrim, and "looked for a city which hath foundations." Paul speaks of having a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens. Restless, uncomfortable, and driven from tenement to tenement, and never continuing in one stay, there should be in it at least an intimation of our really homeless condition in this world, and that we can never be truly settled till we reach the "building of God." There is a house-hunting which it becomes us all to engage in, and there is a move for which all should prepare. It should be a cheering and comforting thought with those of us who are homeless and houseless here, and who are driven, by narrow means and the pressure of discomfort, from street to street, and from one threshold to another, that in our Father's house there are many mansions.

Moving is a time of revelations to the householder. What an inventory of goods and chattels he is compelled to make. Things long lost or concealed, things good and things bad, treasures and trumpery, things neglected and wasted, and things prized and kept with care, are all brought out to be gazed upon and to be estimated. It will be somewhat so in that last move—that October day of our souls—when memory and conscience shall be preternaturally busy searching and bringing every act and thought, every good and bad deed, to light. In the heart, from attic to cellar, there will be overturnings, and strange and perhaps repulsive disclosures. There are things to be taken and things that must be left. It is the last move for better or for worse, to the house eternal in the heavens, or to the outer darkness.

However it may be here, there is plenty of room in heaven. Many mansions, not, however, for rent nor for sale, but a free gift to those who will come and occupy them. Christ has gone to prepare a place for us, and, when our lease on earth ends, the chariot will be waiting, the horses of fire and the angel bands will be ready.

Letter from the Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: I have read two articles recently published in your paper, signed "." I had not intended a reply till I learned the name of the writer; and even now I shall be brief. The writer is my personal friend—so I have thought. He writes well, but he has missed the mark. He lives in a section of the country where he sees but one side. Did he know as much as some others know he would not attempt to ridicule his brethren. Of the sixty to whom he alludes, there are many strong-minded men, clerical and lay. They are cultivated gentlemen and staunch Methodists. No, Bro. "," they are not afraid of ridicule; they are men who firmly stand in any position they assume. I tell Bro. "" he does not comprehend the situation. The great body of the people in Church and State are becoming conservative, and millions are resolving "to come closer and closer together."

What means the recent action of the State Convention in Alabama, where my friend resides? What means the late tour of Mr. Jefferson Davis? What means the $600,000 given by a Northern gentleman to build a Methodist university in the South? What mean the large contributions to the Savannah church? What means the election of so many conservative members to the Congress of the United States? Yes, the people seem to be coming "closer and closer together." The spirit of hatred is abating, and the spirit of fraternity is on the increase. Some Christians seem to think it a virtue to hate Christian fraternity. They will see better after awhile.

Yes, I was at Round Lake. I was invited with many others, including several of our Bishops. I went because I thought it was my privilege to go—it was my pleasure to go. The people of the South get their hats and shoes, their bonnets and ribbons, their plows and ax-handles, their toothpicks and lucifer matches from the North. Why not test their religion, especially as it costs nothing? I went and I met many Christians there from the North and the South, and some from Canada and Great Britain. We had a good meeting. We talked and sung, we prayed and preached about Jesus. Fraternity was seldom mentioned. Organic union was scarcely alluded to; and when it was the terms were kind, the spirit good. A few good people, I dare say, would like to see us one; but this, I say, was rarely mentioned. The Southern brethren behaved well on this subject. They did not intend to offend even those who ridicule fraternity, whether they live in the North or in the South. There are such on both sides of the line.

Yes, I went to Round Lake, and came away a better man. I thank God that I have all prejudice out of my heart. I see good wherever it is manifest. I can forgive those who have done me wrong. I cannot afford to go to the grave and to the judgment seat with bitterness in my heart. I intend to die in peace with God and all men, and, as far as possible, to live peaceably with all men.

While the war went on I was in heart and soul with my people. I rejoiced at their victories and mourned their defeats. When those good and great men, Gens. Lee and Johnson, surrendered, I came home, took the oath of allegiance, intended to keep my vows, and make as good a citizen as I could. Thus far I have been faithful. I did "surrender on the last ten acres." When, however, I did surrender I did it in good faith, accepting, as best I could, the situation.

When the Northern Methodists sent down their missionaries to disintegrate and absorb I was against them, and deprecated their movement. When they held out the olive branch I accepted the offer of peace. In doing this I did no more than the General Conference did. Several of our Bishops have fraternized with our Northern brethren, preaching in their pulpits and introducing them to our Annual Conferences. The General Conference in 1870 treated Bishop Janes and Dr. Harris with Christian courtesy, and invited them to preach in our pulpits. Drs. Hunt and Fowler occupied our pulpits in Louisville. Bishops Kavanaugh and Doggett preached at Round Lake and Sea Cliff. Drs. Lee and Sargent and Poisal and Plummer and Clarke and the missionary secretary preached at Round Lake, and some of them in New York city, and they were treated as gentlemen. Those Southern preachers who went North went in the interest of Christian fraternity as inaugurated by the General Conferences of the two churches. They went and they found God among the people. I have no apology to make, no excuse to offer. I have worked fifty years for Jesus. Since 1844 I have worked for him in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. No man loves Southern Methodism more than I do. And now that our brethren of the North want to have love and peace restored, I am willing to say: "If thy heart be as my heart, give me thy hand." To love Jesus with all my heart, and my neighbor as myself, is the standard to which I aspire. Love worketh no ill; it is kind, suffereth long, is easily entreated and full of good fruits.

Let me say to Bro. "" that he cannot provoke me to sharpness or severity. Age will mellow him. Love, when his soul is filled with this holy principle, will hide a multitude of wrongs.

Books for Young Ministers.

We are respectfully asked to mention and commend such books as we deem most useful and suitable for young theological students, ministers or laymen. We would remark, first of all, that our Bishops—men of culture and large experience in the reading most useful for ministers—have with much care and enlightened painstaking selected and recommended a course of reading for the first four years. We do not know that we can make a better selection. But our correspondent calls our attention to four books, or rather classes of books; and, first: "What commentary, if a student be able to purchase but one?" Commentaries are numberless, and are very various. Some are very scholastic and critical. Others are books of short sermons, as Henry's and Burkett's. Barnes' Commentary has many merits. We regard Whedon's as excellent. Clarke's and Lange's are quite exhaustive. For a student considerably advanced, Lange is perhaps better than Clarke; but it is too complicated and subdivided for students of only limited reading. For a commentary on the whole Bible we do not know that a young minister can do better than read Clarke's Commentary.

We have looked into a number of theological encyclopedias. We regard the plan of McClintock and Strong's as the best. It has only advanced a little more than half way to its completion. This encyclopedia combines the matter and advantages of several very good biblical works of this class. For example, it gives the reader the biblical literature of Kitto; the sects, heresies and creeds of Buck's Theological Dictionary, only greatly enlarged. It gives the student all the natural history, the geography, the topography, the climates and productions of the Orient in application to biblical studies, and an exhaustive account of the manners and customs, religious rites, the agriculture and architecture of Bible lands. Then it gives an interesting account of modern nations in their relations to Christianity. Besides this, it gives most instructive notices of all men distinguished as writers, preachers and reformers from St. Paul to our times. In short, it will, when completed, be almost a theological library, containing a summary of almost all that most ministers would like to know.

Our correspondent suggests Appleton's New Revised American Encyclopedia. We know of nothing better or fresher in its way. Let the student confine himself in his purchases, and he will generally be able to buy these standards.

On homiletics our Bishops have recommended Hoppin's Office and Work of the Ministry. Our correspondent recommends "Broadus on Preaching" as preferable. They are both excellent. There are many excellent works, as Bridges on the Sacred Office, Smith's Lectures, and Miller's Clerical Manners. We suggest to students: Do not buy too many books. You can borrow in your early ministry many good books. Select your library with care. Take time to do it. Most of us who are older have bought and read too much trash. Many much-puffed books are mere rehashes of old and perhaps better books. An excellent rule in buying a new book is to look at the chapter of contents. There you will see some question of interest or difficulty discussed. Turn and see what the writer says. If he is fresh and strong, and clears up obscurities, then the book is likely worth buying; but if he deals in commonplaces and platitudes, and evades the points of difficulty, lay the book down. It is not necessary to drink a whole cask to ascertain whether the wine is good—a single cup is enough to settle its merits. So of a book. W.

Is It Genuine?

The Southern Christian Advocate is investigating the noted Capers letter, and thus far the genuineness seems to be doubtful. Dr. Kennedy concludes an elaborate article, giving reasons for his suspicions, as follows:

There are still other grounds for questioning the genuineness of this timely contribution to the interest of current questions, but we prefer not to unduly prolong this article by detailing them now. For the reasons stated, we concluded that it would be proper to at least postpone the publication of the letter until we could make some inquiry. This we have done, and such information as we have been able to obtain up to this time is far from dissipating the suspicion that an ingenious fraud has been practiced upon Dr. Deems and the Methodist, and through them upon a very large portion of the American public.

Our investigations thus far have failed to discover any such man in South Carolina, or anywhere else, whose name is "C. B. DuPre." We are informed by an old resident of Clinton, S. C., that no man of that surname ever lived there or in the county in which it is located. A postal card from Dr. Deems, dated August 24, together with a large package, supposed to contain copies of the Methodist, lies in the office at Clinton, awaiting the demand of Mr. C. B. DuPre, but with a fair prospect of transmission to the dead letter office, unless the postmaster should feel warranted, under the circumstances, to send them to the Methodist.

It is true that the result of our investigations thus far is not conclusive against the genuineness of the document, and it is possible that subsequent testimony may authenticate it. If so, we shall hasten to state the fact, and lay the letter in full before our readers. Our reverence for the memory of Bishop Capers—than whom a purer, better man never lived—is too profound for us to entertain the slightest inclination to suppress any opinion to which he gave utterance. Should Mr. "C. B. DuPre," therefore—if there is such a personage—produce the original of the letter published in the Methodist, identified by competent judges as in the handwriting of Bishop Capers, we will very cheerfully and promptly acknowledge its genuineness. Thus far the weight of testimony very decidedly forbids any such acknowledgment. Our information touching this matter has been obtained through Rev. H. M. Mood, presiding elder of the district in which the town of Clinton is located, who has kindly promised to prosecute the investigation until the question is settled beyond cavil.

Mrs. Lambuth.

The Richmond Dispatch of September 14 contains an interesting account of a meeting attended by Mrs. Lambuth in Clay Street church, Richmond, September 12. In introducing Mrs. Lambuth Bishop Doggett said that she left Richmond with her husband, for China, twenty-one years ago. Mrs. Lambuth then stated what had been done in Shanghai by our missionaries in that time. She said the Methodist mission near Shanghai consists of three churches and a large circuit. One church is inside of the walls of the city of Shanghai; one just outside the walls, where the missionaries live; and one about sixteen miles distant. The one outside was built of Christmas money sent some years ago, and is called the "Christmas Mission." The distant one is called "Good Hope," and was built of money donated by two brothers. Another church, twenty-five miles distant, will soon be built by friends in Kentucky. The Rev. Mr. Allen is employed by the Chinese government, and is engaged in teaching, translating and editing a weekly religious paper. The Rev. Mr. Lambuth's time is wholly devoted to preaching, translating and traveling the circuit. The ministers have to travel a circuit extending one hundred and sixty miles from Shanghai, and go sometimes in boats on the canal, sometimes in sedan chairs. While traveling they stop at every settlement, distribute books and preach. The work is very materially assisted by native Christian women, who can go into families where Chinese etiquette forbids a gentleman to go. The ladies of Nashville, Tenn., are supporting a native woman who was baptized by Dr. Cunnyngham. She is a most faithful and zealous convert. It is said that in A. D. 35 the Emperor of China heard of Jesus and his wonderful works, and, desiring to see him, sent embassadors to India to bring him to China. When they arrived there the cunning Buddhist priests told them that Jesus was dead, but that they had his image; whereupon they returned with a Buddhist image, and thus was first introduced into China Buddhism. (She gave a very interesting description of the peculiar teachings of Buddhism.) Mr. Lambuth and other missionaries have been advised by some to return home, but, feeling that they have been called to the work by God, they express the intention to remain at their post until called home by the Master. In Baltimore the ladies have determined to support a native female colporteur. A Sunday school in Baltimore resolved to support a secular school.

Mrs. Lambuth concluded by exhibiting some Chinese curiosities, illustrative of the ignorant condition of the people, and their manners and customs.

Prof. C. H. Winston, of Richmond College, next addressed the meeting by special invitation. He said he sympathized with the missionary movement, and the present occasion carried him right over to China—in imagination. He wished to see a grand revival of missionary interest, and thought the present occasion was a good one to begin afresh—rub out and start again, and show more interest than ever in the good cause.

Bishop Doggett then made an appeal for contributions to aid the cause. A large sum was realized.

On motion of Mr. Asa Snyder the Methodist Sunday School Society of Richmond and Manchester resolved to support a regular school in Shanghai, under the direction of Mrs. Lambuth.

CORVALLIS COLLEGE.—This institution of learning opened September 27, with a full corps of competent teachers. About two-thirds of the State Agricultural students have already been appointed, and other vacancies should be filled at once, so that pupils may be ready, as far as practicable, to enter upon the first day of the session, which is highly important. A project is on foot to enlarge the building by adding an ell or wing for chapel exercises, and two additional recitation-rooms. The intention is to commence its construction immediately. The Missionary Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church South appropriated $637.50 to aid in this improvement. It should go forward at once.—Corvallis Gazette.

IT IS now pretty well settled, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist, that the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to meet in May, 1876, will be held in this city. More than two-thirds of the official boards have reported favorably. The remainder will send in their reports next week, and we have no doubt the invitation will be unanimous. This announcement will give general joy to the Methodist community here and elsewhere, and will be very pleasing to the citizens of Baltimore generally.

REV. MR. WYNN, of the Savannah Memorial M. E. Church South, is visiting the city (Boston) in the interests of this edifice. He made a very fraternal and persuasive speech in the preachers' meeting, which was well received in itself, but was followed by a long discussion. The meeting finally, by resolution, indorsed Bro. Wynn and his enterprise.—Zion's Herald.

Columbia Conference.

The Columbia Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South, met in Albany, Linn county, Ore., on Wednesday, September 15, and closed its labors on Monday, the twentieth. It held its sessions (except the first, which was held in the court-house) in our beautiful new church, just completed.

Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh presided to the delight of all.

The disciplinary questions were asked and answered. All the preachers' characters passed under a searching review, and they were pronounced "blameless in life and in official administration."

The reports of the preachers showed an increase in membership, and an advance in all the interests of the church. The business of the Conference was conducted with dispatch and harmony.

R. C. Martin was readmitted to the itinerant ranks. Six were received by transfer, viz.: Peter A. Moses, from the Arkansas Conference; N. M. Skipworth and J. E. Bradley, from the Louisiana Conference; J. W. Compton, from the Baltimore Conference; Joseph B. Perkins, from the North Alabama Conference, and Thomas P. Haynes, from the Tennessee Conference.

One was superannuated—C. H. E. Newton; one located at his own request—B. R. Baxter; and one withdrew from the Conference—E. J. Downe.

The Conference was largely attended. One marked feature of the Conference was that every lay delegate was present, and all the preachers but one.

The new church at Albany was dedicated free of debt.

APPOINTMENTS.

Willamette District.—N. M. Skipworth, P. E. Eugene and Coast Fork circuit, to be supplied; Brownsville and Lebanon, Peter A. Moses; Harrisburg and Tangent, James E. Bradley; Junction City, E. G. Michael; Corvallis and Albany station, T. B. White; Dallas, R. C. Martin; Lafayette, Angelo Hardison; Tillamook, to be supplied; Oregon City, Thornton P. Haynes; Salem station, N. M. Skipworth; Corvallis College, Joseph Emery.

Jacksonville District.—J. W. Stahl, P. E. Jacksonville, J. R. N. Bell; Applegate, S. W. Davies; Roseburg, D. C. McFarland; Coquille, J. B. Perkins; Oakland mission, J. W. Stahl.

Umatilla District.—R. C. Ogiesby, P. E. Walla Walla, F. W. D. Mayes; Powder River and Grand Roude, J. W. Compton; Umatilla circuit, R. C. Oglesby; Boise and Payette, to be supplied; superannuated, C. H. E. Newton.

The Conference determined to hold its next session at Corvallis, Benton county, Ore.—Pacific Methodist.

THE American Bible Revision Committee, in co-operation with the English committee, have resumed their work after the summer recess. Both companies met in the Bible House, New York, September 24 and 25, and made considerable progress. The Old Testament company are far advanced in the Book of Deuteronomy; the New Testament company are engaged in completing the second revision of the Acts. Important communications were received from the English committee, in consequence of recent negotiations, and were favorably responded to. The English committee has also forwarded confidential copies of their revision of some of the epistles, which will be taken up next by the American New Testament company, while the American Old Testament company will probably proceed to the Psalms, after having finished the Pentateuch.

IT HAS been decided after careful consultation, says the New York Independent, that Mr. Moody shall begin in the late autumn a series of meetings in this city under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. The immense building best known as the Hippodrome has been engaged. It will hold eight thousand people, and it is reasonably expected that it will be filled with crowds eager to hear the famous evangelist, and that a rich blessing will follow his labors.

CARDINAL MCCLOSKEY is said to have presented the Pope with a purse of $100,000, "a gift from American Roman Catholics." In the Papal Consistory the Pope, after delivering an allocution, announced that Monsiguori Antici-Mattei, Pacca, Randi, Simeoni, Vitelleschi and the archbishop of Rennes, whose names he reserved in pectore at the consistory of last May, have been created cardinals. He also appointed several archbishops and bishops.

THE official members of the Methodist Episcopal Churches of St. Louis, says the Western Christian Advocate, have very reluctantly given their consent for the removal of the seat of the next General Conference to some Eastern city. The matter will finally be determined at the meeting of the Bishops in November. There can be but little doubt but a change will be made to Baltimore.

DR. KELLEY, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, has been requested by the Board of Missions to repair to St. Joseph, Mo., to be present at the farewell meeting, December 19, when Bro. A. P. Parker is to take leave of his friends, to accompany Sister Lambuth to China. He goes with the benedictions and prayers of thousands.

THROUGH a private note from President Dyer we learn that Greenville Collegiate Institute, Greenville, Ala., opened auspiciously, and that on October 5 there were one hundred and twenty-five students in attendance. This is an excellent school, and should be generously sustained and supported by our Alabama people.

Periodicals.

WIDE AWAKE is a very fine illustrated magazine for girls and boys. Published by D. Lathrop & Co., Boston. Ella Farman, editor. It is a very attractive and entertaining publication. Price, $2 a year. We have received No. 4 of volume 1.

APPLETON'S JOURNAL is unsurpassed in its literary merits, and contains a valuable and reliable record of current literature, art and science. The number of October 2 has a fine table of contents and an illustrated article.

THE SHINING RIVER is the title of a collection of new music for Sunday schools, by H. S. and W. O. Perkins. Oliver Ditson & Co., publishers, Boston.

THE SANITARIAN is a valuable monthly published in New York. A. N. Bell, M.D., editor. We have received the October number.

PETERSON'S LADIES' NATIONAL MAGAZINE for November is unusually brilliant in its colored fashion plates and fine engravings.

THE AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST for October is splendidly illustrated, and brimful of useful and entertaining articles.

THE SOUTHERN CULTIVATOR for October is replete with information for planters, housekeepers and gardeners.

The Plague in Fiji.

HARROWING PICTURES OF THE SUFFERING VICTIMS.

Further information from Fiji conveys still further accounts of the plague which has recently passed over the new colony. A resident of long standing, writing to a Victorian cotemporary, says: "The death rate is not yet made up, but the probability is that forty thousand Fijians died during the four months' plague. The native population of Fiji is now about one-third only of what it was when I landed here about twenty-five years ago." The accounts given of the magnitude of the disaster are less harrowing than those of the sufferings of the victims. "Very few died of the measles, the majority dying of subsequent disease in the form of dysentery, congestion of the lungs, etc. Want of nourishment or starvation carried off many thousands." We are told that "all work was suspended for some months. You could pass through whole towns without meeting any one in the streets, which were soon completely covered with grass. Entering a house you would find men, women and children all lying down indiscriminately, some just attacked, some still in agony, and others dying. Some who were strong enough attempted suicide, and not always unsuccessfully." We are further told that "as the scourge became more permanent four or five were buried together in one grave, and generally without religious service. In some cases the dead were buried in the earthen floors of the houses, in others just outside the house. The burials were hurried, and the probability is that some were buried alive. In many instances the husband, wife and children all died. In one village all the women died, and in another all the men." It is interesting to read of the different mental effects produced by the torture of disease. It is not surprising to find that "some made fruitless appeals to their ancient god. Some inland tribes, who had only recently embraced Christianity, considered that the disease was conveyed by their religious teachers, and they dismissed them and then abandoned their new religion. Among these some were killing the teachers, but wiser counsels prevailed. It is said that one tribe buried alive the teacher's wife and child—whose husband and father had died of the plague—to stop infection." But while some in their distress fell back on their former superstitions, the greater number are said to have borne their calamity with fortitude, and to have suffered and died under the influence of Christianity.—Sydney (New South Wales) Herald, July 30.

AT THE London Society's hospital in Pekin nearly twenty thousand patients were prescribed for during 1874. Dr. Dudgeon, who has been in charge of the hospital for ten years, dispels the common notion that the Chinese are not grateful for medical favors bestowed upon them. He has been in the habit of receiving every kind of courtesy from his patients, and has the hospital filled with tablets erected by those who were cured. Some of these, given by well-known ministers of State, governors of provinces, and princes, are very handsome. Complimentary scrolls, detailing the praises of the foreign physician, have come in almost without number. The Chinese custom of sending an annual present to their doctor has been faithfully observed. Men of the highest rank have not been afraid to affix to his medical works their prefaces, in which they state that the Western medicine must soon supplant the present native practice. Dr. Dudgeon also refers to the growing curiosity in regard to foreign science. It is not an uncommon thing to find his book shop filled with savants purchasing or consulting works, or subscribing for some journal, or asking for some scientific information. Among other works, there has been a great demand for Dr. Martin's translation of Wheaton's "International Law." China moves slowly, but she does move.—Independent.

REV. R. T. ROWLAND, late pastor of Wesley circuit, Tennessee Conference, died in great peace, near College Grove, September 29.

REV. JOHN H. HALL, of the White River Conference, died September 26.

MARRIED.

GOODRICH—KNIGHT.—By the Rev. R. A. Davis, on the fifth instant, at half-past seven P. M., in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Pattersonville, La., Mr. Alvin E. Goodrich, of Iberia parish, to Miss Mary Luna Knight, of St. Mary parish, La.

GAY—MINVIELLE.—October 4, 1875, by Rev. D. F. White, at the parsonage, New Iberia, La., Mr. John H. Gay to Miss Marie E. Minvielle, both of Iberia parish, La.

A MAN may hew down the bitter fruit from an evil tree until he is weary; while the root abides in strength and vigor, the heating down of the present fruit will not hinder it from bringing more. This is the folly of some men: they set themselves with all earnestness and diligence against the appearing eruption of lust, but leaving the principle and root untouched, perhaps unsearched out, they make but little or no progress in this work of mortification.—John Owen.

MOST of the failures in life arise from an ignorance of how and when to leave off. When you read the life of almost any great man, with the exception of Augustus Cæsar, you see how much greater a man he would have been if he had known how and when to leave off.

E. E. F. ROSS, Esq., connected for several years with the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is now on a tour through the West and North on business connected with the office. He will confer freely with our patrons and agents in the different cities in regard to our mutual interests, and we bespeak for him the courtesies which have been so liberally extended heretofore, and which we have not forgotten.

THE advertisement of C. Rogers & Co.'s Piano Fortes will be seen on this page. The Messrs. Rogers claim that their pianos are second to none in the market, and invite the attention of the public to their instruments. Their establishment is located at 226 East Forty-Second street, New York. Those interested will do well to correspond with this house.

SHOW CASES.—John Henderson, 270 Canal street, New York, manufactures every variety of show cases, from the plainest to the finest white metal. Price lists will be sent to those applying. Orders received from all parts of the United States and Canada. We would advise those who wish to purchase to examine his prices before buying elsewhere.

ON THIS PAGE will be seen the card of J. Palmer Strong, general produce commission merchant, at 461 Greenwich street, New York. Mr. Strong will receive consignments of country produce, which will be sold and prompt returns made. Those wishing to ship to that market should correspond with him.

THE WILSON ADJUSTABLE CHAIR. We call attention to the advertisement of the above chair, which will be found in to-day's paper. These chairs combine elegance with comfort, and will no doubt meet with a large sale. Parties desiring to purchase will address the company at 592 Broadway, New York.

THE WESTMINSTER OF NEW YORK. Because so many distinguished people have stopped at the Westminster Hotel an impression largely prevails that it must be very expensive to live there. Such, however, is not the case. While the Westminster enjoys the reputation of being one of the most select, and one of the best appointed and most comfortable hotels in the world, the experience of those who have been its guests is that the prices are no higher than at other large first class hotels. Indeed the many advantages it affords, its rich appointments, quiet and convenient location, and its superior internal arrangements and discipline, render it not only the best, but likewise the cheapest.

A NEW CITY DIRECTORY.—A well-compiled directory, such as the one last published by Soards for 1875, is of almost universal necessity in the stores and offices of New Orleans. We have never had a better directory than his for this city, but the publisher himself promises to surpass it in his New Orleans Directory for 1876. He will soon call upon our merchants for advertisements and subscriptions, and commence the canvass. The publication will involve much labor and expense, and the publisher relies upon the liberality of many subscribers to reimburse his investment. The advantages of advertising in this work are known to our business men, and they will only help themselves when they help make a good City Directory.

R. ESTERBROOK & CO.'S STEEL PENS.—In this issue we insert the advertisement of the Esterbrook pens. The Esterbrooks have so persistently pushed the business, so successfully have they competed with Birmingham, that within a few months we understand that orders from the leading houses were on the books of the company taking turn in the product of a factory of two hundred and fifty hands. The Messrs. Esterbrook have brought a liberal and off-hand policy into their business, and the result is that when their monthly accounts are made out they include the leading stationers and dealers in pens in all the States of the Union and of the Territories too. The Esterbrooks have as great a variety of pens as there are tints in an autumn foliage.

PAOLI BELT COMPANY.—The advertisement of this company will be found on th ls page. That electricity is not guiding ground as a remedial agent there can be no doubt. It is claimed that nervous and chronic diseases rapidly succumb to the powers of the Paoli Belt. We have read the published certificates of several eminent physicians of New York, who speak in flattering terms of this mode of treating the diseases mentioned.

WE CALL ATTENTION to the advertisement of William Gibson's Sons' Stained Glass Works. These works were established in 1838, and have been in successful operation since that time. Those who wish ornamental windows for churches or private dwellings are referred to their card. Their establishment is located at the northeast corner of Broadway and Thirteenth street, New York.
